ORR ADMITS HE IS CONVICT WANTED

Prisoner Explains His Method of Unlocking Handcuffs With Hairpin.

IN PRISON, TALKS FREELY

Recognized by Former Companion He Tells How He Hoped by Legal Fight in Oregon to Outwit State Authorities.

WALLA WALLA, Wash., April 29 .-(Special.)-Explaining in detail to his traveling guard, N. E. Loveall, his method of unlocking a pair of old-style hand-cuffs with a hairpin, Frank W. Orr, the convict who was returned from Portland tonight, confessed that he was the man who made his escape in Pasco two years ago, while being brought to the prison. The confession was made on the train between this city and Pendleton and was brought about by the recognition and was brought about by the recognition of Orr by an ex-convict who had known him while serving his first sentence in the penitentiary here as John Adams. This convict entered the coach after the train left Pendleton and spoke to Orr, calling him Adams. It was then that the prisoner became confidential with his captor and told the story of his escape in Pasco in November, 1908.

Prisoner Describes Escape.

According to authorities at the prison, Orr said after his arrival that he thought he could "work" them by maintaining his innocence, though he said he recognized the officers in Portland when they came the officers in Portland when they came for him. He said he gave the guard the "go-by" in a crowd in Pasco in November, 1908, when being brought to the prison, secured a hairpin with which he opened the handcuffs and proceeded immediately to Portland, where he had been ever since. He did not seem to be gloomy over his return and talked freely at the prison tonight.

Orr, whose actions in Portland won him nuble serviment, served a term in him public sentiment, served a term in the Walla Walla prison previously, hav-ing been discharged in May, 1907, when W. H. Kincaid was warden. He was ar-rested October 16, 1908, on the charge for which he is now serving a sentence, but escaped from Barney Estabrook, the traveling guard, in Pasco en route to the institution. He is to serve 14 years.

Making Bags His Task.

Orr remarked to the Warden tonight that he thought he could "win out," and gave that as the reason for putting up the fight he did in the Portland courts courts.

He said he saw many people in Portland whom he formerly had known, but that they falled to recognize him, and he did not believe the officers were still searching for him. or was placed in a cell in the wing where he formerly was held and will take up his former vocation of making jute bags in the morning.

ESCAPE FROM CELL ATTEMPTED

in Work on Lock.

the public, in which he reasserted his innocence, and made some comparisons between his fate and that of certain men of wealth who, he intimated, had not received their just deserts.

When he learned that the Governor had decided against him, and that the writ of extradition had been granted, Orr determined that if possible he would escape fall. All Wednesday night he labored to open the lock of his ecil. Information of this attempt was given by T. V. Beckwith, a prisoner who occupied an adjoining cell, who complained that Orr's in-cessant picking at the lock had prevented the informer from sleeping. Beckwith said that whenever anyone from without approached the cell, Orr would spring into his bunk and feign sleep. It was believed that friends of Orr had smuggled a piece of steel spring into als cell. It was this suspicion that impelled Detectives Coleman and Snow to refuse permission to Orr to receive visitors after the fourth day of his incarceration.

Saddened by his confinement, Orr inscribed the following yesterday LIFE

Behold the babe! Amidst the anguish of travail is born.

A messenger of God, a child, a mite, into this world of stress and strife; Clothed in innocence, in purity of ethereal spheres, in God-like form.

As the great Christ himself was born.

Behold the man! The triune being, the moral, reasoning heast.
The brute crowns all, its function being to fight.
Despite the virtues that obtain to right.
What odds the innocence, if Life's a hopeless task and sorrow proves a feast?
A man's a sacrifice, to say the least.

ENVOL Why should a man be brought into this life If his birth is to herald a period of strife? Retter to let the soul lie dormant, unhurt, If by living he crushed all that is worth.

FIGHT VICTIM MAY DIE Man's Skull Fractured and Alleged Assailant Is Held.

Bert Dewitt, 22 years of age, son of a grocer at Union and Failing avenues, is held at police headquarters pending the outcome of injuries he indirectly inflicted upon a man who was struck on the head in a fight near First and Madison streets at 12:30 o'clock this morning. The police are endeavoring to establish the identity of Dewitt's victim, who was rushed to St. Vincent's Hospital suffering from a fractured skull. At an early hour this tured skull. At an early hour this morning the victim was thought to be dying. He is apparently a laborer, of 50 years. Dewitt told the police after his capture by Patrolinan Lillis that he struck the blow in self-defense. His victim fell heavily to the sidewalk, he said.

BUTTE, Mont., April 29 .- Advices late of the Humbird Lumber Company at Sand Point, one of the biggest plants in Idaho, had been destroyed by fire and the flames are now threatening Pendray and Kootenal.

Between 50,000,000 and 60,000,000 feet of lumber have been destroyed. Fifty last night state the lumber-yard of the Humbird Lumber Company at Sand Point, one of the biggest plants acres of ground, piled 25 feet high with number, have been consumed. The flames lighted the country for miles around and the terrible grandeur of the conflagration from view points on the lake made a new sensation for the population in little hamlets within a radius of ten miles. The fire broke out shortly after dark. "Our loss will be between $250,000 and $300,000," said T. J. Humbird, president of the company. "Of that amount we are protected by $225,000 insurance on

The fire was thought to have been confined to that portion of the yards north of the connecting track between the Northern Pacific and the Great Northern, on which were piled about 24,000,000 feet of lumber. The fire started in the lath shed and blew directly toward the piles of lumber now burning.

The wind carried the flames away from the town and Sandpoint is in no danger unless the wind veers.

BUTTE, Mont., April 29.—(Special.)—At 12:30 A. M. the flames were rapidly advancing on Kootenai. Damage at this hour is estimated at $750,000.

Returning from an automobile ride taken at night, Frank Maulding, Will Morehouse, Dan Morehouse and Albert French tell of having seen Halley's omet early on Sunday morning from Welches, on Salmon River. The comet is described as appearing like a bird, yellowish in color and with no tall. It yellowish in color and with no tall. It was seen at 4 o'clock, or a trifle later, in the morning.

"Was it Venus?" said Dan Morehouse last night. "I do not see how it could have been, for it was so bright. We left here at 12:20 Saturday night and at 4 or a little after in the morning we saw it in the sky between a gap in the mountains apparently about as high as the top of Mount Hood as seen from Portland. It looked more like a big bird than a comet and had no tail. The astronomical party which intended camping out on Council Crest on Wednesday night to look for the comet gave up its plan when a message was sent just before midnight that the skies in the east were cloudy and probably would continue so. HORSE SALES BRISK

Buyers Are Prompt and Offer Good Prices.

QUALITY OF STOCK GOOD

Sirty Horses Will Go From Portland to All Parts of Northwest. Two-Year-Old Clydesdale Filly Brings $660.

Yesterday's horse sale was the most lively of its kind ever held in the city. Bidding was brisk, buyers wanted horses, and everything brought into the ring attracted prompt attention from buyers, who were willing to name fair values. Better horses have been sold in Portland, though the average sold in Portland, though the average in quality was good. About 60 horses were sold, and will go from Portland to all parts of the Northwest. A 2-year-old Clydesdale filly topped the afternoon's sale at $660, going to D. M. Dryden, of Woodburn, Or. This morning at 10 o'clock the sale will commence with the Shetland ponies, after which the select consignment from the Bonday Stock Farm at Roseburg, some fancy saddlers, the Hackney stallion Squire of Chester, the Woodland Hackneys, several purebred Percherons, the Belgian stallion Zephirin, and the Spanish jack Zo-Zephirin, and the Spanish jack Zo-borro will be offered. Then will come the Kruse herd of registered Holsteins, first thing in the afternoon, which will mark the end of the sale, which Orr spent his last day and night in the Portland jail in efforts to escape by plotting the lock of his cell, in writing a set of verses on "Life," and the Portland is the properties a statement, addressed to

MOTHER OF PARLIAMENTS

Study of the English System Early Government.

Harpers. The vital thing about the English Parliamentary system is that it has grown, evolved, and has not been congrown, evolved, and has not been constructed or built up from outside. It is still full of the life of past ages, Why, for instance, was the present general election fixed to begin in the middle of January? Because the old church peace of Christmastide lasted one week beyond the feast of the Epiphany, which falls on January 6. Again, why do the Legislators of England generally scatter abroad in the second week of August. It is not at all in honor of Saint Grouse's day, as they profancy suggest, but in order they profanely suggest, but in order that the bread of England may be gathered in harvest. So much is this so, that Edward III. once constrained to summon an Autumn Parliament, sent writs for only half the Commons, that the rest might stay at home and gather in the grain. But the beginnings of Parliament, in its essential genius, lie much farther back. They lie, indeed, in the life of the cuthroat, turbulent pagans, Saxons, and Angles, Jutes and Danes, who and Angles, Jutes and Danes, who came yelling and burning and murdering to Christian Britain fifteen centuries ago. These wild tribes of the North sea shore had one great belief and custom. They invariably met together to talk, to make and hear speeches, to applaud or disapprove, in all main matters of war and peace. And from these wordy meets they gathered all the determinations of their tribal life. When they came to spread fire and sword through Britain, they held have attracted many. together in their tribes, and kept up these tribal talks in all their pristine vigor and popularity. They were not nations, these Angles and Saxons; they were tribes, separate, complete in themselves, each one seizing and de-fining a territory for itself out of the conquered British soil. So the Wil-sactas, the Dorsactas, the West Saxons the East Saxons, the North Folk, the South Folk, cut out for themselves tribal territories, in Wilts, Dorset, Wes-sex, Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk; and so with the other tribes. The boundaries of these tribal territories have re-mained almost unaltered since the first settling of the pagan pirates from the fens of the Oder and the Elbe; they have been far more lasting than the confines of the realm itself.

OIL KING DISLIKES DELAY
