Four Dead, Many Insane, 50
Prostrated Hot Wave's Toll in New York.

MULTITUDES SEEK PARKS

No Cooling Breeze Relieves Suffering in Crowded Tenement Sections—At Washington Mercury Climbs to 100.

NEW YORK, June 21.—(Special).—Four deaths, three of them in Brooklyn, many persons driven insane and 50 or more prostrated, marked today the hottest as well as the longest day of the year. The thermometer registered 88 at 5 o'clock. Every park in the lower part of the city was crowded, and Central Park and Riverside Drive were the goals of swarms of sweltering men, women and children.

At Coney Island, it was estimated that at least 10,000 spectators on the beach. Captain Galvin had 25 patrolmen detailed to watch over them. Coney was crowded all day long, the number of visitors being estimated at 150,000.

In the city the recreation places had not a foot of spare space. Entire families left their stuffy homes to breathe the air which was fresh, if not cool. Along the North and East rivers the residents of the lower East and West sides, which, because of congested conditions, suffered more than other sections, thousands spent the night on roofs or fire escapes. The penny ice cream and lemonade vendors did a thriving business.

But New York City was not the hottest spot on earth, according to the Government Weather Bureau. In Washington, Senators and Congressmen were sweltering with a temperature of 100.

Cincinnati was the next hottest spot in the East, the mercury there mounting to 98. St. Louis and Boston suffered with the thermometer registering 94 and 92 respectively. In all these places the weather was cloudy and, because of the high humidity, there was much suffering and many prostrations. It was 74 in Atlantic City and, with a clear sky, was just about the most comfortable spot in the East.

NEWSBOY PROVES HERO

Comrade, Half Drowned, Held Above Water Until Police Came.

NEW YORK, June 21.—A prosaic police report told today how the courage and endurance of 18-year-old Antonio Teleso, an East Side newsboy, saved the life yesterday of Dominick Fredo, 8 years old, as the boy was drowning in a water tank on the roof of a six-story tenement house where he lives.

When playing on the roof with the other children, the Fredo boy climbed to the top of the water tank which is 12 feet high. Sitting astride the edge, he lost his balance and fell into the water.

When the policeman, hurriedly summoned, reached the roof, they beheld a hand tightly gripping the edge of the water tank. The policeman scrambled to the top of the tank and found that the hand clinging to the edge was that of young Teleso, whose other hand clung to an unbreakable strap of the collar of Dominick, thus keeping him above the water.

Leaning over, one of the policemen picked up the smaller boy, who was almost exhausted.

To all appearance Dominick was dead, but the policeman finally resuscitated him.

FREIGHT TERMINAL BSGUN

Milwaukee Road to Guard Against Congestion in Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 21.—The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Company has been ordered to guard against congestion in Chicago by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The commission has ordered the company to prevent the repetition of traffic congestion such as was experienced in Chicago by all railroads last winter and which cost the loss to the St. Paul road of nearly $500,000 revenue in a single month.

The cost of the present improvement will be approximately $500,000. In time, however, the freight terminal facilities at all railroads in the city will cover four times as much ground as the present improvements.

The St. Paul company has purchased in the vicinity of the two townships 800 acres of land, at a cost of more than $1,300,000.

As the present plans of improvement contemplate the development of 200 acres, 600 acres will be left for future enlargement.

CYCLONE'S PRANKS UNIQUE

FORT MORGAN, Col., June 21.—Lifted from the bed in which she was sleeping by a cyclone which demolished the house, Mrs. W. Randolph, the wife of a ranchman living near here, last night was carried 25 feet through the air and deposited in a wagon that stood in the yard behind the house.

Beyond a few minor bruises and the nervous shock resulting from her experience, the woman apparently has suffered no injury. Two children in the bed with Mrs. Randolph were uninjured.

Roosevelt Excites Smuggler.

NEW YORK, June 21.—Isaac Pollock, a cloak and suitmaker of this city, who came over on the same steamship as did President Roosevelt, is said to have been the victim of a kidnapping before the United States Commissioner in Hoboken, N. J., as to why $20,000 worth of jewelry found on his person by a customs inspector was not declared. His explanation is an unusual one. He says there were exciting times on the steamship all the way because of Roosevelt's presence on board and being of an excitable temperament, he forgot to declare the jewelry.

TRAIN SHOWS TO 2000

PEOPLE FLOCK TO FARMING DEMONSTRATIONS.

At Tekoa, Farmers' Union Makes Visit Occasion for Safe and Sane Celebration.

TEKOA, Wash., June 21.—(Special).—The Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company's farming demonstration train was one of the principal attractions today at an early and safe and sane Fourth of July celebration at Fairfield, attended by 1000 adults and about as many more children. The celebration was given under auspices of the Farmers' Union and was in the nature of a picnic with horse races, athletic sports, including baseball, as additional features to the demonstration train.

The train was the center of interest for more than two hours just after lunch and was met at the depot by the combined Fairfield and Rockford bands. The demonstrators were entertained at an elaborate picnic dinner, at which an excellent orchestra was in attendance. Notwithstanding the attractions furnished to the countryside at Fairfield, big crowds of farmers also visited the train at the nearby points of Rockford and Latah. At the former place 350 listened to the lectures and went through the train, and at the latter 400. Tomorrow the train will make two more stops at Tekoa, where 250 were in attendance. In all the train showed to 2000 persons today.

At Latah and Tekoa the milking-machine attracted special attention by reason of the bringing to the train of cows that had been milked by machine to take the place of the animals carried on the train. At Latah it was discovered that someone had been tampering with the machine and clogged the valve. The trial was abandoned there but was successfully performed at Tekoa.

KERMIT CHIP OF BLOCK

LONDON PICKPOCKET SENT SPRAWLING BY BLOW ON JAW.

Attempt to Grab Young Roosevelt's Watch Meets With Rebuff—Commotion Attracts Crowd.

LONDON, June 18.—(Special).—While Colonel Roosevelt distinguished himself as the guest of the Corporation of the City of London, his son Kermit scored a little nearer the East End in quite a different capacity.

Every American knows that Middlesex street—or, as it is more popularly known, Petticoat lane—is one of the most extraordinary places in the world on Sunday mornings. It is the great emporium of poor Jews. Thither thousands of working men and women flock from all over London on Sunday in the hope of getting cheap second-hand clothes and other articles of domestic utility. But the place has been made famous by a spirit of curiosity, also, among many Londoners who are curious to see the scene.

It is notorious that the "Lane" is on these occasions the resort of all sorts and conditions of men whose mission in life it is to find pigeons to pluck. All the sharp and cunning people who make the "Lane" the scene of their activities, and the stranger with a watch chain, exposed to the risk of being snatched, and the watchman who is the target of their attention and comes away with his property intact.

Kermit Roosevelt with two friends ventured into the crowd the first Sunday spent in London, but they had been warned as to the composition of the mass of peculiar humanity which one would meet. So Kermit carefully left his valuable gold watch at home and provided himself with a common one, worth about a dollar or so.

He was not more than a few minutes in a crowd which was admiring the eloquence of a dealer in spurious jewelry, when a light-fingered operator made a dash for Kermit's watch. The watchman, who was like the watch of a common pattern.

Quick as a flash Kermit caught the intruder on the point of the jaw and sent him sprawling in the roadway. The commotion attracted the attention of a policeman, who immediately arrested the thief. Kermit was always on the lookout for thieves on Sunday mornings, but Kermit refused to proceed to the police headquarters to prosecute the thief. He was heard to remark as he walked away that he had been in tougher corners than Petticoat lane and had no wish to spend valuable time in a London police court.

COACH MYSTERY SOLVED

MUNICH NO LONGER WONDERS AT PHANTOM CARRIAGE.

Occupant Is Identified as Russian Millionaire, Who Always Drives Standing, Chained to Hood.

MUNICH, June 18.—(Special).—Bavarian papers have of late had a first-class mystery with which to stir local interest. Correspondents have been writing to tell of a strange carriage that has been seen, with mysterious occupants, in the park of Furstenfeld. The carriage, they declared, was the old coach in which the mad King Otto II used to be given the air at rights. But an official denial came along with the declaration that the King had not left the castle of Furstenfeld for years. Within its confines he drags out his lamentable existence.

Still, the coach was real, so investigations were continued and now the explanation is available. One who has seen it more than once says:

"For many years this carriage has rolled through the shady avenues of the royal park and all those who saw it had a shiver of terror, easily understood when it realized how weird it seemed. I was coming home through the park with my children, on bicycles, one evening recently, and we were talking of the phantom coach when one of my sons said suddenly: 'Look, papa, here it comes!'"

"I heard the sound of hoofs, then the rumble of a heavy carriage and suddenly the old-fashioned landau, with the hood at the back raised, came into view, standing up, was a thin man with a long beard. It was impossible to distinguish his features but he was certainly attached to the hood of the carriage by his collar or he could never have remained standing like that with the vehicle lurching as it was.

"This strange traveler gazed at a tattered may which a lackey held before him and afterwards extended his hands as if to say: 'All this is mine!' The servant showed the map with the latitudes and weary gesture of a lunatic's guardian, obliged to repeat interminably the same explanation.

"The aspect of this poor lunatic suspended in his carriage, and the silence of the forest, gave me a lugubrious impression which I have never been able to shake off. Upon inquiry, I found that the mysterious traveler is a Russian, possessor of an immense fortune, who has been treated for a number of years at the lunatic asylum situated on the outskirts of the park of Furstenfeld. One of his whims is never to stir, while driving in his carriage. That is why he is attached to the hood."

STEAMER THREATEND BY FIRE

Alarm Proves Efficiency of Drills on River Craft.

Fire broke out aboard the river steamer America at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, while she was berthed at the foot of Alder street, ready to leave for lower river points, and for a short time it appeared as if the blaze would attain serious proportions. It was quenched through prompt response to the fire whistle and assistance rendered by other craft.

The American's fireman had attempted to relight the oil burner, but failed, and without turning off the flow of fuel rekindled a torch and tossed it into the firebox. Immediately there was a "kickback" that ignited a pile of oil sacks. The fireman made brisk scramble for safety.

The fire whistle, a device attached to the boiler and used solely for alarm, was sounded and the crew of the Italia, lying alongside, had the pump working and a hose aboard the America in less than a minute, while the Tahomah's company lent a hand and bore the passengers had reached shore the fire was subdued. The damage was nominal.
