A crowd of 20 Chinese trying to arrest a pair of American loggers, can make lots of noise and Patrolman Oelsner might have been a little deaf and still have heard the racket which arose at Fourth and Davis streets about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The noise was punct-pated with blasts from a police whistle, which is the Chinese's most efficient weapon of offense. Running to the place, the policeman found a crowd of Celes-tlais trying to capture Jim O'Donnell and George Light, whom they accused of George Light, whom they accused of ommitting depredations in a restaurant.
O'Donnell, when he saw the officer coming, knocked down several Chinese and ran away. Oelsner pursued and caught his man in less than a block's He returned to the crowd and

The men were taken to a Chinese res-taurant at 75 North Fourth, where the employes said that O'Donnell had at-tempted to carry off everything in sight and that he had knocked the waiter down. The Chinese said that Light took O'Donnell's side and showed a police star, saying that he was a detective. The badge was lost or thrown away in the scuffle. He has created for himself a place in the hearts of the better class of theater-goers which is everlasting. His audience last evening at once fell under the spell of his enormous vitality and the personal Collier.

The step between comedy and farce is so small, that he is wise in his day who is able to distinguish the dividing line. Mr. Collier is a farceur who calls his play a farce, when it is in reality excellent comedy. Too, unlike a farce, the plot is not lucidly transparent. It is the unexpected that happens, and consequently holds interest.

"A Lucky Star," which is an adaptation of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's novel "The Motor Chaperon," by Anne Crawford Flexner, is one of those rippling but peculiarly entertaining plays, a bit more definite perhaps than is usual in this class of theatricals. Briefly it tells of the complications which arise from the chartering of a motor boat to two separate parties, one of whom is an American artist, and the other two young girls. FIGHTING RELIGION BEST

North Yakima Woman Has No Time for "Molly-Coddle" Type.

NORTH YAKIMA, Wash., (Special.)—Mrs. Charles Gibson, the wife of the pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, received a round of applause at prayer-meeting this week for her bold declaration that she had no use for the "molly-coddle" sort of religion which takes its owner off in a corner somewhere, there to exercise it alone, but that she believed in the fighting variety, which can mingle with the crowd.

The statement followed some remarks by the "pillars of the church" to the effect that they had spent as quiet Fourth, away from the prizefighters, gamblers and horse-racers. Mrs. Gibson said that she heard at the Fourth of July celebration, which the "brethren" had tabooed, a speech which had stirred her patriotism, and which she wished every young person could have heard. Mr. Gibson, who had charge of the meeting, skillfully saved the day by announcing the closing
