

MRS. ASTOR WON'T REWED COLONEL

Famous New York Divorcee Denies Rumor as She Sails for Home.

SINGLE LIFE IS BEST NOW

Years of Incompatibility Such as to Make Reconciliation Impossible, Declares Noted Society Matron, London Favorite.

LONDON, July 28.—(Special).—Mrs. Ava Astor, better known as the wife who divorced Colonel John Jacob Astor, the cynosure of all London society matrons for the past few months, sailed today for New York aboard the Mauretania.

This statement would mean little if it did not connect her name with a reconciliation, as gossip was heard today.

Cupid, however, will be foiled, so says Mrs. Astor. At least, she told an intimate friend just before sailing, that there was no probability of a reconciliation.

Cupid to Be Foiled. "Our separation came after years of incompatibility," said Mrs. Astor, "and you know I would not go back to that life again."

The smart set of London regrets the departure of Mrs. Astor, for during the past season she has been the leader in no small way of everything social. Society has copied her gowns, her hats and the way she dresses her hair.

Mrs. Astor is going direct to Newport on her arrival at New York and will pass the summer at the summer home of her brother, Barton Willing, who has opened it for her. Mrs. Astor has told friends here that she intends to return in October for golf at North Berwick, where she has acquired quite a reputation on the green.

Position Unique in Society. Unlike many American divorcees, Mrs. Astor's position immediately following her separation from the Colonel, and her arrival here, was unique, in that London society at first looked askance on the Astor divorcee.

Mrs. Astor was not at first admitted to the "charmed circle" of London society. Why? Nobody knew, nor did anyone express a theory. The gossip was stilled, apparently by the gracious manner in which the divorcee carried herself. She was apparently not desirous of re-entering society as the same is played here. Mrs. Astor waited, acted herself, was agreeable to everyone, old friends and new, and it was not long before she was taken back with open arms by the noted "charmed circle," which now knows her as "one of ours," even so far as to copy her in many things in which the beautiful Ava Willing Astor is the leader.

Among those who were at the boat today to bid Godspeed to Mrs. Astor, were members of fashionable society including the Duchess of Marlborough, Lady Willoughby Devesby, her sister, Lady Allstair Carr, Lady Selina, Mrs. Waldorf Astor, who "was one of those beautiful Langhorne sisters of Virginia," and the Duchess of Portland, who has been one of Mrs. Astor's frequent guests at her little dinners here on Hill street.

Mrs. Astor's Dinners Famous. Speaking of Mrs. Astor's dinners, it might be worth while to mention, not that the modest matron is gone, that no smarter parties were given here the past season than Mrs. Astor's in her home where gaslight is still used and the rooms are dismantled of most of the treasures belonging to Lady Sackville, its owner.

Yet these drawbacks did not interfere one iota with the success of the parties which were always attended by young and old, by all admirers of the "Mrs. Astor," who "isn't going to rewed the Colonel," but will return here next season to entertain and be entertained. And London society again breathes freely.

NOVELIST GOES ON STAGE
Laura Jean Libby at 48 to Make Debut on Roof Garden.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Laura Jean Libby, the author of "When His Love Grew Cold," "Lovers Once But Strangers Now," and more than 50 other novels, will make her debut on Monday in a New York roof garden.

"In the years I have been writing," she explained last night, "I have received thousands of letters from girls throughout the country asking for personal talks. This opportunity gives me ability to answer them. When I was a school girl, my teacher told me that one day I should be either a great writer or a great actress. Well, I have been a writer for a good many years. Now I am told that I can act; the time has come to make a trial."

Miss Libby's mother, Mrs. Van Meter Stillwell, in private life. She was born in Brooklyn in 1862.

MT. MCKINLEY NOT SCALED

river, and essayed to relay our outfit by packing it overland. As this would involve walking, or more fitly called climbing and struggling on hands and knees through deep snow and nearly impenetrable forest underbrush some 350 miles, we gave it up as impossible.

Were we at last brought to bay, and our purpose defeated? We seriously asked ourselves this question, but there was not a dissenting answer. Each one replied, not while strength remains and the summer lasts. Thereupon we found and hired an Indian guide, and aided by his marvelous skill and courage we ascended the glacial torrent in our boat, and brought a part of our supplies.

We only reached this camp yesterday, and Alec, the Indian, is ready to go back for the rest of our outfit, which he promises to bring up the river in a few days, so I have only time to announce the passage of the greatest difficulty we expect to encounter between the sea and the top of Mount McKinley. In the meantime, we shall continue our march across the glacier, and when Alec returns with more supplies we shall begin our attack upon the great peak itself. I hope to be able to send a more detailed account by Alec when he finally returns.
