OREGON LAW GOOD

Federal Court Does Not Uphold Child-Labor Employer.

LIABILITY CLAIM FOUGHT

Insurance Company Contests on Ground Employer Violated Law by Hiring Boy for Whose Injury Judgment Is Given.

The United States Court yesterday declined to declare the Oregon child labor law unconstitutional. Neither was the law sustained. Judge Robert S. Bean just refused to interfere with a statute which has stood for 17 years...

not attending school, all of which is required by the act of 1903. The Wind River Lumber Company in a demurrer raised the question of the constitutionality of the act of 1903. The demurrer was overruled.

The final determination of the case is awaited with much interest by employees of labor and insurance companies, many of whom are said to be not only employing children under the legal age, but are protecting themselves through insurance.

TWO LOSE CLAIMS, ONE WINS

Federal Court Decides Contests Under Timber and Homestead Laws.

Peculiar manipulations of the timber and stone act as applied to the public lands were brought out in three cases passed upon by Judge Robert S. Bean in the United States Court yesterday morning. Harry W. Dunn, of Eugene, lost a Lane County timber claim because the Government proved that he had erroneously proved up on the land as agricultural, while W. H. Glenn, of Eastern Oregon, lost his claim because he had taken agricultural land under the timber and stone act.

Harry W. Dunn was in business at Eugene in 1901 when he filed on the land. He said he had lived on the property continuously for two years, and had cultivated a large part of it. The District Attorney succeeded in showing that Dunn had never lived on the property, nor in any other manner barred by the law. Dunn did not resist the Government.

After the Government officers had attacked the patent secured by W. H. Glenn, the defendant being cared for by having taken agricultural and grazing land under the timber and stone act, the owner of the land raised on demurrer the question that the patent barred the United States from inquiry into the representations by which it was secured. Judge Bean overruled the contention and the case will go to trial on its merits.

denied knowledge of the transaction. The court ruled that the unsupported evidence of the Wallowa County citizen was insufficient to counteract the denials, and the patent was allowed to stand.
