Thinking Pedestrians Highwaymen, Clerk Opens Fire. Victim Will Live.

BULLET LODGES IN THIGH

Kenneth Abbott Declares He Commanded Men to Halt, but They Say He Fired First—Question of Boy's Sanity Raised.

NEWPORT, Or., Aug. 10.—(Special.)—Frightened by the belief that two pedestrians he and Mr. Wilcox, one of the owners of the Wilcox & Hammer grocery store, at Nye Creek, met in a dark spot on McAuley street, at 9 o'clock last night, Kenneth Abbott, a 16-year-old clerk in the store, fired a shot from a revolver, wounding George Smith, of Portland, in the leg. Smith and Edward Russellton, also of Portland, were on their way to a dance.

Physician Dresses Wound.

Then Abbott and Wilcox returned to the grocery store. Smith and Russellton sought a physician. Dr. Mintoney dressed Smith's wound, which proved to be a flesh wound in the thigh. The bullet pierced his coat and trousers. They then notified the City Marshal of the shooting and he telephoned to Sheriff Ross.

Grand Jury to Hear Case.

Sheriff Ross made a thorough investigation. After hearing the evidence he telephoned to Deputy Prosecuting Attorney Hawkins at Toledo, who ordered him to subpoena Abbott to appear before the grand jury, which meets on August 12.

OREGON TROOPS WIN

"Regulars" Meet Waterloo at American Lake.

CONFLICT MOST REALISTIC

Army Maneuvers Add Lasting Laurels to Beaver Troops Under Command of Col. Evans, U. S. A., Major May and Col. Yorran.

single order. That the Oregon regiments could be relied upon the Red commander, Colonel W. P. Evans, U. S. A., soon found when he rode into the field to dispose his forces at 8 o'clock in the morning.

The Third Oregon, under Major John L. May, of Portland, and the Fourth, under Colonel George A. Yorran, of Eugene, had marched the necessary six miles from Cosgrove and were in position. But the Colonel's own regiment, the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry (colored), was not on hand, much to his dismay. There was no time to lose, so the Oregonians were hurriedly projected into the advance, a place intended for the crack Twenty-fifth. As the Red Army was moving to meet the Blue Army in this order, the missing regiment caught up, having gone astray in the heavy timber en route from Cosgrove.

The conditions of the battle were these:

The Blue Army, under Colonel McGunagle, U. S. A., was on route from Tacoma to Olympia, conveying 81 wagons with treasure and supplies. The force was made up of the First U. S. Infantry, Third Battalion of the Second U. S. Infantry, the Second Montana Infantry, Battery A, Battery A, Second Field Artillery, Troop H, First Cavalry, with detachments of engineers, hospital corps and signal men.

Valuable Stores Seen.

The Red Army, having arrived in the region and learned of the opposing forces, developed designs on the valuable stores. This force was made up of the Oregon regiments, two troops of the First Cavalry, a battery of the Second Field Artillery, the Fourteenth and Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry regiments, and the necessary detachments.

On going into the field neither command had any definite information concerning the other. This information had to be developed by extensive reconnaissance and scouting. The two armies began creeping together at a point eight miles south and east of Cosgrove. The first contact was a brisk artillery duel, which developed a secondary attack by the Oregon regiments on the left wing of the Blue Army.

An interval of 1000 yards separated the two forces and both were well screened by timber and underbrush when the Oregonians suddenly deployed across a broad field and advanced. The Blue Army hurriedly concentrated several battalions and some artillery to keep the Oregonians from breaking through and taking the $150,000 wagon train.

This action was brisk and lasted an hour, while Colonel Evans hurried the main body of his troops on to strike the Blues in front. Hypothetically, the Oregon losses were very great at this point, for heavy shrapnel and infantry fire was concentrated upon them. Advancing to within 600 yards of the enemy's flank, they halted in a desecrated and pumpeled way until the main attack developed in the van.

First Infantry Annihilated.

The Blues then hurriedly concentrated in front nearly two miles away, where the Fourteenth and Twenty-fifth were pounding them and the Third and Fourth Oregonians moved up further to harass the flank. The First Infantry of the Blue Army here got under an overwhelming fire and was pronounced by the umpires to be completely annihilated.

With a regiment gone, the Blues were markedly handicapped. The Red forces pressed their advantage with every man firing as fast as he could work bolt and trigger. The umpires eventually gave the signal to cease firing, and the engagement was closed.

It was the judgment of umpires rather than the operations of the grim reaper that determined the effectiveness of the various movements. All umpires were officers of wide experience and they were able to figure approximately what the effect of the different actions would be in actual warfare.

When recall was sounded and the troops began assembling, the Fourth Oregon appeared with a platoon of regular engineers which it had captured. There were many patrols taken during the day, but this was the only instance where a full platoon was trapped. The Fourth picked up the engineers in the heavy timber, while harassing the Blue left flank.

In every respect the conduct of the troops in the field was excellent. Not a single case of heat prostration or exhaustion was recorded. It was made apparent that the Western soldier is not subject to the weaknesses that invariably cause wholesale breakdowns and thus endless criticism at Eastern maneuvers.

After retreat early tonight the troops were about as usual, plainly unaffected by the 20 miles of marching and running through heat and dust. Even some feet were raised. The sick list in the Oregon camps is a meager one and there are no serious cases. Lieutenant-Colonel Poorman is confined to the general hospital with an attack of gastritis, but expects to return to the command of the Third Regiment by the end of the week.

The work for tomorrow will be in the nature of field instructions by companies and battalions. Paraffine bullets will be used. The next maneuver of any extent occurs Friday afternoon.

Acting Governor Bowerman arrived in camp early today and observed the field operations. With him were Colonel C. E. McDonnell, former commander of the Third; Major F. S. Malker, former battalion commander, and Captain H. U. Welch, of Battery A, Portland. District Attorney Cameron also spent the afternoon in camp.

Governor Bowerman and party and Governor Hay, of Washington, were the guests of the Oregon officers at mess tonight. Afterwards a regimental band concert and informal reception were given in their honor.

ELOPERS ELUDE FATHER

GIRL STEPS IN TAXI WITH LOVER AS PARENT PURSUES.

Seattle Candy Dealer Loses Race With 17-Year-Old Daughter. Police Put on Trail.

SEATTLE, Wash., Aug. 10.—(Special.)—While her father stood in front of his candy store in the Sanitary Market this morning, Edith Kidney, 17 years old, stepped into a waiting taxicab with Ole Olson, 28 years of age, and started to beat her father to the marriage altar. The couple have, up to the present time, successfully eluded the father, who is in pursuit. He has telegraphed the police of all the neighboring cities asking them to arrest the pair. He made a report to the local police.

J. P. Kidney, the father of the girl, runs a candy store in the market in which his daughter has been working. This morning at 9 o'clock she excused herself for a few minutes. "The youngest daughter of Kidney ran into the store, telling her father that Olson was eloping with his daughter. The father reached the street in time to see the couple enter the taxicab."

WATER ELECTION NEAR

SALEM DEEPLY INTERESTED IN PROPOSED PURCHASE. Advocates of Plan to Buy Existing Plant Figure City Will Reap Profit From Ownership.

SALEM, Or., Aug. 10.—(Special.)—Seldom has such interest been created in Salem as is now manifest in the election which will be held next Monday to determine whether the city shall float bonds to buy the plant of the Salem Water Company and expend $75,000 in the extension of water mains.

If this proposal carries the city will pay the water company $205,500 for its plant and will assume the outstanding debt of $80,000 in 5 per cent bonds. In addition it will take up $46,000 worth of maturing 6 per cent bonds.

The committee in charge for the Council, Acting Mayor Gideon Stoltz, N. D. Elliott, W. H. Eldridge and August Huckestein, has prepared a statement showing that the city will secure an annual profit of $17,500 in taking over the properties. The present total income of the plant is $85,000 and the expenses are $32,000. In addition the charter amendment makes provision for expenditures of $44,000 for the purchase of water power and $75,000 for future extensions. If the Council deems it expedient to expend these sums it would increase the interest charge $3000, but at the same time it would relieve the city from annual rentals of $3000.

It is estimated by the Council committee that the increased revenues which would be derived from the extensions, together with the additional business to be secured after the inauguration of the new sewer systems, in addition to revenue from the added growth of the city, will practically double the present income of the plant.
