Worth Knowing

It is always worth while to know the difference between your wants and your needs, and in most cases success or failure hangs on this distinction.

There are lots of things you should both want and need, and the chief of these is a home of your own—unless you already have one.

It is an easy matter for any person of good health to get a home of his own, if he backs his health with industry, and confines his wants to his needs.

It is one thing to get a home that will eat up your salary for years to come, and then be worth only the additional value of the lot, and another to turn one of our 6-acre tracts at Bancroft Acres into a home, garden and orchard that will make you independent 10 years from now.
