CORDRAY BLAMES SHOWS

Salem Refuses to Pay Big Money for Poor Attractions, He Says.

John F. Cordray, manager of the Salem John F. Cordray, managor of the Salem Grand Opera-House, takes an opposite view to the dispatch in The Oregonian under date of October 12, which said Saubert attractions will not be seen in that city because of poor attendance and that bookings of the Shuberts in that city will be cancelled unless they re-ceive better patronage. Cordray lays the blame at the door of the Shuberts themselves, in sending poor shows to Salem, but charging exorbitant prices. Mr. Cordray gave out the following

Salem, but charging exorbitant prices. Mr. Cordray gave out the following slatement!

In a dispatch from Salem the statement is made that the Shuberts intimate that Salem will be cut off the Shubert map unless more patronage is given theatrical attractions in that city. The people of Salem are perfectly willing to patronise and welcome any first-class attraction of salem are perfectly willing to patronise and welcome any first-class attraction of the matter is this: Salem people object to being forced to pay first-class prices for attractions which are not first-class. They decline to pay $1.50 for attractions which play elsewhere for 75 cents and $1. It is the custom of many producing managers to send on the road a play which has achieved a New York success, but for the road the producer will fill his company with inferior people. Although cheapening the corpany, the manager does not lower the price. But insists on maintaining the tax demanded for a real performance by completed players.

There is nothing the matter with the people of Salem. Any manager, the Shuberts or others, who will send good attractions at the right prices will receive the patronage of Salem. So many poor attractions and cheap companies have been fosted upon salem at prices beyond what the atraction deserves that the theaterspoors of that city are naturally a bit suspicious. No recognized attractions which play for $1 in Portland damand $1.50 at Salem?

The dispatch states that possibly the mother-picture houses are responsible for the neglect of the traveling companies. If a motion-picture theater can win patrons away from a Shubert attraction, then there is something the matter with the attraction, and it indicates that the patrons of the picture houses must believe they can get more value for their many the patrons of the picture houses must believe they can get more value for their money there than from a Shubert attraction.
