Burned and stunned by the explosion of a revolver fired in his face by a celebrating Italian, Patrolman Stuart, still blinded from the flash of the weapon, had a hand-to-hand struggle with a mob of infurlated men at Fourth and Sheridan streets, and came off vic torious, though badly battered, with

Jall under serious charges. Stuart saw a man at 661 Fifth street firing a shotgun, and pursued him. As he was running a young Italian thrust a revolver in his face and discharged it. Though blinded by the flash, Stuart, letting the fugitive go, grappled with the second man, threw him down and put handcuffs on him. The prisoner called out to his friends and a mob poured out of each of the saloons in the vicinity. Surrounding the officer, they tried to take his prisoner away, and for a moment succeeded in doing so. Stuart returned to the fray and recaptured his man. He backed into a doorway and drew his club. The Ital-lans swarmed around him, kicking him and striking him about the legs with clubs. Stuart was in a fair way to be overpowered when Special Pollceman Lillis happened along and went to his assistance. The mob dispersed quickly.

Before the crowd surrounded him Stuart had succeeded in making his way to the patrol box and calling for the wagon and additional officers. They arrived soon and took the prisoners to the station. D. Gallucci was charged the Indians. The head of the party is J. S. King, head cruiser for the Chapman Lumber Company of Portland. He was accom-panied here by his brother, W. P. King. They came from Klamath Falls and here secured the services of two other men and a four-horse wagon and team. Nothing could be gleaned from the men behind this deal that would give any authentic information as to their purpose. The most plausible guess at the meaning of this timber cruising expedi-tion is that the Chapman Lumber Com-pany, which is one of the largest lum-amount of timber on the Klamath In-dian reserve and to report to the Gov-ernment the advisability of its being offered for sale and then the further announcement coming from Washing-ton that work was going to be ordered on the Modoc irrigation project on the reservation and that the cost of this project was to come from the sale of Indian timber would seem to show that the Chapmans had reason to believe that this timber would be placed on the market at an early date.
