DECIES OF ANCIENT LINEAGE

Title Modern and He Is Not in House of Lords.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—Baron Decies, whose name is pronounced as if spelled Dewshew, with the accent on the first syllable, is the fifth of his title, which is Irish and was created in 1812. His family name is John Graham Hope Horsley-Beresford. He is a distant relative of Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, the famous naval leader, who is a son of the fourth Marquis of Waterford.

As an Irish Baron not holding an imperial title and not being a representative peer, he is not a member of the House of Lords. Though Decies is a title of modern creation, the Beresford family is an old one in the Irish peerage. Its members had the title of Baron la Poer from 1425 to 1726, when the title became Viscount Tyrone and Baron Beresford. Of his three younger brothers, the oldest, now heir to the Baronage, is Seton Robert Horsley-Beresford. He is two years the junior of the Baron and was a special correspondent in South Africa in 1900. In 1909 he married Della Dorothy O'Sullivan, who obtained a divorce from him in 1908 and remarried her second husband being Sir Charles P. Huntington Bart.

INTERVIEWS DISGUST DECIES

Curiosity of American Savors of Servant Girl's Love of Lord.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—(Special.)—"I say, this is laying it on a bit thick, isn't it, to come and ask a chap on his wedding morning for an interview?" Lord Decies paused as he adjusted his Ascot cravat in his room in the residence of Anthony J. Dray, Jr. "It's most extraordinary," said Lord Decies. "One must be interviewed in this country. It seems, every time one is shaved or changed one's cravat or anything of that sort."

"I think the fuss over my wedding most astonishing. Don't understand it at all. Why, there was actually a crowd in front of the church at rehearsal yesterday. Women wanted to get in and all that. And one poor blighter pushed back a bobby and an awning fell on him. Extraordinary upon every word. Why should they want to see two persons married whom they don't know? Most of the weddings of people I do not know bore me to death—and funerals, too."

"Do you know I think it's a sort of below-stairs attitude on the part of the Americans, but I don't mind to show such curiosity. It's the state of mind of Liza, the servant girl, who reads tuppenny novels about Lord Algeron and Lady Murray. I don't know how her brain gets addled by the hour, and Miss Gould told me yesterday we'd probably be mobbed at the church, but I laughed. I'm not afraid of any of these cranks who write me letters, anonymous most of them. My mail every morning is full of them. But I shouldn't like the future Lady Decies to be mobbed. Dash it all, I shouldn't, you know."

"I understand, of course, that Mr. Gould's prominence and Mrs. Gould's beauty and executive ability, and all that sort of thing, you know, add to the interest in this thing. But really the newspapers do go a bit far. Why, one chap last night asked me how an old fellow like me could win such a pretty young girl."

"Old—begad—I was so angry. I don't remember your name, but it's all right," he concluded, as he slipped into a fur coat. "Everything is all right, merry as a wedding bell, as they say. We'll be off soon on our trip, then. Egypt, then England and quiet. Oh, but it will be good."

If Lord Decies' bride has one regret in the world it must be because her wedding cake was only two months or a year old, as Mrs. H. G. Brown, maker of fashionable wedding cakes, will tell you it ought to be.

However, the 250-pound cake, three stories, or four feet high, with ornaments and trimmings from Scotland, is the finest Mrs. Brown has ever baked. It cost about $1000. More than 100 pounds of fruit were put in it and the sherry, brandy and rum which meliorated its luscious interior cost $200 and $10 a quart. The baking caused a decrease in weight.

The tiny bisque Cupids which decorated the tiers of the cake were imported from Scotland. Each bisque Cupid held an electric luminous bulb in his chubby hands, which was to be lighted at the wedding luncheon. In the top of the second layer were two other Cupids, carrying a cushion on which the Decies coat-of-arms had been cunningly woven in sugar. Other figures of bisque and sugar decorated the tiers and held garlands of sugar orange blossoms in their hands.

The pinnacle of the cake was a huge couch shell, in which a dainty Venus rode on waves of sugar rose leaves. Another Venus lay asleep in the other half of the shell.

Although Mrs. Brown has been baking wedding cakes for a great many years, Miss Gould's was the largest of all. A special automobile was carried the cake in sections to the Gould home from Mrs. Brown's apartments.

HARMLESS LEAD FLIES AT JUAREZ

Battle Between Federals and Insurrectionists Is Termed "Exhibition."

FIGHT LIMIT 15 MINUTES

Two Hundred Shots Are Fired and Rebel Chief Declares His Men Only Used 50 Bullets Because Government Troops Fled.

EL PASO, Feb. 7.—The first battle of Juarez between federal troops and insurrectionists was exhibited here today.

"Exhibited" is the proper word, for no one was hurt on either side, and the "exhibition" was viewed by a thousand or more El Pasoans who lined the bank of the Rio Grande on the American side, about three miles west of this city.

The exchange of missiles occupied about 15 minutes, during which about 200 shots were fired. According to Pascual Orozco, leader of the insurrection, his men fired only 50 of these. He declared that the federal troops got away so fast that they were out of range before more could be fired at them.

Tonight the federal army behind the walls of the cathedral of Guadalupe, the barracks and the bulging of Juarez, across the river from here.

Orozco Says He'll Attack.

Orozco remains in possession of the position which he occupied at noon and held against the federal advance. He declared in an interview with the Associated Press correspondent that he firmly intends to attack Juarez, but that he awaited the arrival of General Blanco with 350 men. He said that he looked for the latter at any moment.

Orozco's present force in the vicinity of Juarez numbers under 600 men—probably 550. Of these, 350 were with him in the skirmish this afternoon. The federal force, by actual count, numbered 100—100 foot soldiers and 84 mounted infantry. They took with them no artillery and Orozco has none.

The insurgent leader and his men spent last night at a ranch known as ranch Flores. Orozco quit the ranch during the forenoon and by moving through the deep arroyos which scar the desert everywhere, reached a new position on the hills along the river across from the smelter. Here the correspondents who had been on his trail since daybreak found him. He carried a rifle, like his men. He looked careworn, but determined. He answered questions only after deliberation and often evasively.

Rebel Chief Is Evasive.

He was of no mind to betray his plans. He borrowed some ink for his fountain pen and also a writing tablet. He expressed a wish to visit El Paso to get a "square meal."

An insurrectionist, clutching a five-peso bill in his hand, crossed to the American side. He had been sent to buy a dinner for Orozco. A soldier turned him back, fearing that he wished to purchase ammunition. Again on the Mexican side, he encountered some newspaper men, who guaranteed the innocence of his mission. He bought his supplies under their supervision, and was sent back grinning.

Orozco's Stock Drops.

Orozco's stock dropped several points among his sympathizers—first, when he allowed Rabago to elude him at Bauche on Sunday and, second, for failing to attack Juarez on the heels of that officer.

In the course of conversation today he gave his side of the story for the first time.

He had waited at Bauche two days for Rabago. He was without food and water. His men clamored for an advance on Juarez, he said, declaring that Rabago was a myth, or had been engaged further south by Blanco.

Leaving 50 men on guard where two railroads crossed, he moved north. His men were nearly exhausted from thirst, hunger and fatigue, and his horses unable to move faster than a dejected walk.
