riod of Seven Years.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20,---(Special.)---Nancy Carnegies elopement with her riding instructor has ended disastrous-ly, despite the fact that her uncle. An-drew Carnegie, put his stamp of ap-proval on the match. She has returned, with her four children, to her mother's home in Pittsburg, and her husband, James Hever, is here. The husband says that his ill-health and that of his wife brought about the separation and that neither is seeking a divorce. Mrs. Hever has said nothing, tut she has taken up a permanent res-idence with her mother and is devoling her time to the bringing up of her four children. NEW YORK, Feb. 20,-(Special.)-

Uncle Andrew Approves.

The girl's immediate relatives were shocked, but Uncle Andrew accepted his new nephew at once. In a public interview, he said it was much petter to have a riding master in the family than a worthless duke. Hever started a small racing stable, and the Hever-Carnegie alliance was augmented by four children. While his wife was visiting her mother in Pittaburr in 1909. Hever was thrown his wile was visiting her mother in Pittsburg in 1909, Hever was thrown from a horse, and paralysis followed. The little racing stable was a failure and ill-fortune played with the family until it has culminated in a separation.

CAPE HAYTIEN, Hayti, Feb. 20.→ Government troops, after recapturing Quanaminth from the rebels, got out of the control of their officers, pillage and burned the town and massacre those of the inhabitants who were un pillaged able to escape. Jean Prosperi, a citi-zen of France, was assaulted, his 18-year-old son killed and their home burned.

The insurgents had captured Fort Liberty and Quanaminth. President Simon set out for the disaffected territory at the head of five columns of troops. He was accompanied by his daughter, Celestina. The army occupled Fort Liberty without a shot hav-ing been fired. Nevertheless, a large number of arrests of those suspected of treachery to the government were made and the suspects shot to death. The army then moved on to Quanaminth. The rebels in possession of-fered resistance and sanguinary fighting followed. The rebels were soon beaten back but the government officers could not stop the advance of their men. The sold'ers got out of hand and the massa-cre that followed was horrible. The inhabitants who had not fled were killed and the town burned. Meanwhile another force under the Minister of the Interior Jeremie captured the town of Vallerie to the south of Quanaminth, and it is expected that this will be burned. The killing of Prosperi may result in complications with France.
