Emotional Quality Is Priceless Heritage of Liberty-Loving People, Says Orator—Home Rule Is Predicted.

Woodmen of the World Hall, Eleventh street, near Alder, was crowded to capacity last night by people who gathered to participate in a memorial in honor of Robert Emmet, the great Irish patriot who paid the penalty of love for his country by dying on an English scaffold in 1803.

Hullin does not seem to be deeply concerned about his predicament. He talks freely, saying he has an uncontrollable and inextinguishable desire to cut a lock from a beautiful growth of hair, when he sees it, ever since he cut Miss Lawrence's hair, and then he is evasive and at one time said no case could be made against him, as "there might be a dozen men in the city cutting hair."

Monomania, Says Hullin. "I don't know why I cut off the hair of those girls," he said in his cell at the City Jail. "I guess it was because after I cut Miss Lawrence's hair, on a sudden, I acquired a mania for it which I could not control."

Through speaking in a dazed manner, Hullin talked rationally on every other subject. He said that he had been out of employment three months and was just trying to start in the real estate business. He expressed fear that the authorities had gained respect and unfavorably upon his prospects. Regarding the offense for which he was arrested, he acquired caution overnight, and responded to questions by saying, "Ask my lawyer," although he never communicated with any attorney.

Two Men Unite to Fight Policeman Making Arrest.

Whether they were bitter enemies, ready to spring at each other's throats, or loyal friends, joining forces to double-team Patrolman Nelson, was a question which Duke Rodgers and George Reynolds, arrested early yesterday morning at Fourth and Pine streets, were unable to decide. Nelson had come upon them to find Rodgers standing with his hands over his head and blood streaming down his face, while Rodgers was going through his pockets. Nelson placed both under arrest and both resisted.

By turns the two prisoners joined hands in fighting the officer, then their resemblance of mutual hatred would dissolve the coalition and would fly at each other while Nelson strove to maintain armed neutrality between the two. Between the two and the officer, then the two prisoners themselves, lasted all the way to the station, where they were booked as drunk and disorderly.

are struggling to free themselves from oppression. Mr. Munly recited the work done in the cause of Irish freedom by such successors of Emmet as Parnell, Redmond and O'Connor, and prophesied that the day was not far distant when Ireland would have home rule. In conclusion, he advised his hearers not to accept as Irish men whose names designate them as such, but who participate in "dirty" politics.

"Such men take no part and have no joy in an occasion of this kind," the speaker declared. In his opening remarks Roger B. Sinnott, the chairman, sketched briefly the life of Robert Emmet, highlighting the effort made by the patriot to free his country negro whose name is unknown, a 59 men left El Cajon, a small town about 12 miles from this city, late last night, and tonight is reported to be advancing on Tia Juana. An attack is expected at daylight tomorrow.

So serious do the Mexican officials at Tia Juana regard the situation that tonight they ordered all the women and children in the place to cross the line to American territory.

The force of rebels was recruited in the vicinity of El Cajon and is said to be made up about equally of Mexicans and Americans. The officers in command of the American troops patrolling the border have been notified of the departure of the rebels, and an effort will be made to prevent any violation of the neutrality law.

It is believed, however, because of the rugged character of the country and many miles of border which the American troops are unable to patrol in an effective manner, that the insurrectos will experience little difficulty in crossing into American territory.

The descending force at Tia Juana consists of 70 men, of whom 15 are Federal soldiers.

EL PASO, March 5.—Insurrectos are slowly starving the City of Chihuahua, capital of the Mexican state of that name, according to El Paso merchants.

Mexican authorities declare that Chihuahua has provisions sufficient for two months, but the revolutionists have control of the railroads leading to the city, and merchants here have learned that coffee is selling at $4 a pound and sugar $1 a pound, and that prices for other goods are correspondingly high, with all food constantly getting scarcer.

So far as Chihuahua is concerned, the Mexican Central road is tied up. No supplies have passed the rebels' blockade since the latter part of February.

Reports from the blockaded city are to the effect that it is in no danger of an immediate attack and that 2000 Federal troops protect the city, but that business is demoralized and prices are soaring.

In the Mexican Central, passenger traffic is at a standstill from Juarez south, and the Wells-Fargo Express Company has instructed its agent at Juarez to receive no shipments for points between Ciudad Juarez and Zacatecas on the Mexican Central, a distance of nearly 1000 miles.

The gravity of the situation at Chihuahua is indicated by the departure of a construction train tonight carrying Colonel Rabado and 500 Federal troops to receive no shipments for points between Ciudad Juarez and Zacatecas on the Mexican Central, a distance of nearly 1000 miles.

Officials of both the Mexican Central and the Northwest Railroads declare that their roads have been commandeered by the Mexican government and are being operated under Federal control.

This fact apparently has come to the knowledge of the insurrectos, who are making efforts to destroy railroad property and to demoralize traffic conditions on both roads.

Catarrh is a disease of the mucous membrane. The mucous membrane, one may say, the interior lining of the body. Catarrh therefore may exist in any part of the system.
