The automobile man who makes a radical reduction in the price of his cars, admits lack of quality and lack of demand. One follows naturally on the heels of the other.

The dominant thought in that man's mind is to get rid of his cars. And when he gets rid of them in that way, he disclaims all further responsibility.

We have knowledge of electric cars that are being sold in that way—are being forced on the public by means of the bargain-counter route. And we most emphatically disassociate ourselves from that class.

The Woods Electric is a bargain at its list price because of its quality. Nothing on earth is a bargain at any price unless it has quality behind it.
