EXTORTION CHARGE UP

RICHARDS' GRILL SCENE OF ALLEGED ATTEMPT.

Barteur Said to Have Tried to Secure Cash to Prevent Testimony in Dent Case.

Alleged attempt of Tom Bostaur, a bartender, to extort money from Tom Richards, proprietor of an Alder street restaurant, to avert a threatened prosecution for furnishing liquor to 13-year-old Ruby Dent, will be made the subject of an investigation by the grand jury when it reassembles today. It is believed that the accused has left the city.

Information has reached the District Attorney that on three occasions, while the cases involving the delinquency of the girl were pending, Bostaur went to the Richards grill and made demands for money, basing them upon the statement of the child that she had been served with beer by Richards' waiters. The last attempt, it is said, was made before Ruby before the case was to be called in Municipal Court, when Bostaur, according to a clerk in the Richards' establishment, made his last demand, saying that if Richards did not "come through" testimony would be brought out that would put him into a lot of trouble.

At the same session of the grand jury will take the charges against Henry Haino and Charles Kirchner, proprietors of the Turn Halle cafe, Fourth and Yamhill streets, in which place, according to Ruby Dent and Bostaur's wife, the child drank both whisky and beer. These men were bound over in Municipal Court last Saturday.

At the hearing in the Turn Halle case, Ruby Dent testified that she had drunk in the Richards grill, but while Mrs. Bostaur, her companion, admitted that she had been a party to the child's being served at the Turn Halle, she denied flatly that Ruby had been allowed to drink in Richards' place. Mrs. Bostaur said that Ruby had tried to stick to the story, because they might get a "bunch of money" out of it.

Richards is positive that the child had no intoxicants in his place and is disposed to press the charge against Bostaur if he is found.
