LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 2.—(Special.)—It was a sad and gloomy day for McCredie's ball club this day. His pitchers blew up one after another in a way that must have made the great heart of the Beavers' leader go pit-a-pat with shame as he watched the double-header progress. But the showing made by the Dillon bunch must have eased his pain a little. It was not baseball they played today—it was pit-a-pat. And the team broke even at it.

The first game in the morning was rained by Portland, by a score of 3 to 4. But the sad part for McCredie came with the afternoon contest, when Stein blew up and the Angels gobbed seven runs in the second inning on Archer's pitching. It was heart-breaking even to the Los Angeles fans.

The weather was damp, cloudy and generally disagreeable, and the crowd that turned out to see the game was anything but responsive, even to the home-run knocked out by Tommy Thoresen in the fourth, and hardly rose to its Regals when the home aggregation banged in three tallies in the seventh of the first game.

Arlett Is Yanked.

Arlett started the ball rolling in the morning contest and managed to get through the first inning with some credit. In the second, Delmas hit a single wavering toward the center field fence, and Steble counted. It was an easy one for the man in the box, but Arlett juggled it and McCredie yanked him out of the box in double quick time and poked in Henderson, the ex-outlaw.

Henderson did fairly well, until Akin socked one off in center field for three bags, with one out, and then he, too, went to pieces and the aforesaid several large lilies started up on the scoreboard. Off came Henderson's head and Stein replaced him. Thoresen's pitching saved the game for the Beavers, the winning tally, as the box score shows, came in the ninth on a fielder's choice and single.

Why go into the details of the horrible second game? Are not its fatal tallies recorded in the dismal box score? Is 10 to 2 a score for a baseball game?

Five Angels Walk.

Stein started in the funeral by walking three Angels in the second inning. Then Akin singled and Stein completed the walk by walking two more—five in all during the woful session, and McCredie took pity on him and sent out Archer. It was no picnic, for seven runs were piled up before the bell. Arlett finished the game, allowing but two hits, Criger, who pitched for Los Angeles, was banged freely, according to some consolation for the McCredies.

You can't expect a team to settle down to its stride in as short a time as McCredie's comment this evening. "We got no chance to practice until after the season opened, and then we have to pay up for that lack. How do I get not all demoralized. Watch the boys round into shape."
