that have now been secured the construction of the bridge will be proceeded with as expeditiously as possible. All that remains for Kiernan and Dunway to do is to continue bargaining. Credit to City Assailed. As a result of the tactics followed by Kiernan and Dunway, the credit of the city was seriously impaired so far as the construction of the Broadway bridge was concerned. Sale of the bonds necessary for the improvement was embarrassed. In fact, for several months it was impossible to sell the bonds at all. Taking advantage of this situation, Mayor Simon and the friends of the bridge organized a movement having for its purpose the sale of $250,000 of these bonds by popular subscription. In the aggregate $200,000 had been subscribed by loyal citizens for this purpose, when the National Shawmut Bank, of Boston, accepted an issue of $250,000 and paid over the money. With this money construction work began. One pier has been completed. When the city sought to sell another block of $500,000, Kiernan and Dunway renewed their hostility to the project and succeeded in preventing the sale of the bonds until Monday, when the entire block of $500,000 was delivered to the Boston firm. During all of this time, Mayor Simon, when not harassed by vexatious litigation and trouble in selling the bonds, was devoting his time toward keeping the contractors, retained to construct the substructure of the bridge, in good humor. This was not an easy task, naturally, in view of the conditions. However, the members of the Union Bridge & Construction Company apparently appreciated the situation and in every way co-operated with the Mayor and the Broadway bridge advocates, and with fortitude awaited a final determination of the protracted litigation to which the obstructionists resorted. Great progress can now be made on the bridge. With nearly $500,000 with which to work, there is nothing in the

When Mayor Simon took office two years ago, the street railway company was using the old Madison-street bridge for crossing the Willamette, paying the city $1200 a year for that privilege. This use of the bridge was in consideration of a contract that does not expire for 12 years. When the funds became available for building the new bridge and the contractors employed by the city began to demolish the old structure, the railway people demurred, insisting that they should either be permitted to continue to use the structure covered by their contract or have the same facilities for crossing the river on the new span and for the same consideration. The city, however, did not view the situation in the same light and in the ordinance authorizing the construction of the new span arbitrarily fixed at $15,000 per annum the rental to be paid by the street railway company. This difference was never adjusted. When the bridge was completed, there was a general demand on the part of the people served by the structure that the span be opened to travel and the use of street cars. Mayor Simon took the subject up with the railway people and insisted upon a compliance by the company with the terms prescribed by the Council and assessing an annual rental of $15,000. But the railway corporation remained obdurate. It would consent to the payment of no rental in excess of that called for under its contract with the city and which did not expire for about 12 years. Clamor from the residents of the city for the opening of the bridge and its use by the street railway company at this time reached such proportions that further delay could not reasonably be continued. It was then that the city, through Mayor Simon, entered into a stipulation with the railway company by the terms of which the interests of neither party to the controversy were prejudiced, but granting to the railway
