

SOCIALISTS HOPE FOR HEAVY VOTE

Party's Nominee in Portland Sure of 3000; Thinks Figure Will Be Higher.

ENTHUSIASM RUNNING HIGH

Number of Members Paying Dues Increased Five-fold—Charles H. Otten Conducting Vigorous Campaign for Mayor.

Encouraged by successes in Butte, Mont., Milwaukee, Berkeley, Cal., and many small cities of the New England and Middle Western states and in Oregon, where they have elected two Councilmen, one in St. Johns and the other in Medford, the Socialists of Portland are bending every effort to bring success to their ticket on June 5, municipal election day.

Well-Known Orator Coming.

So hopeful and enthusiastic are the Socialists that they have arranged to import speakers for the closing days of the campaign, among them Benjamin F. Wilson, a brother of J. Stitt Wilson, Mayor of Berkeley, who is scheduled to arrive today. His coming has been widely advertised and preparations are being made at Socialist headquarters to seat the large crowds which are expected to flock to the party's hall to hear his address.

Mr. Otten said yesterday, reviewing the political situation: "We shall poll a much larger vote than at any previous election in Portland. As an illustration of the way the party has been gaining strength, there is the fact that we now have 1000 dues-paying members in the organization in this city, whereas two years ago the membership was only 200. Our speakers during this campaign have met enthusiastic receptions and have been listened to on the streets by larger crowds than we even dared to hope for. Of 3000 votes I am certain, and 5000 would not surprise me."

Campaign Speakers Engaged.

"Among the speakers we have engaged in this fight are Howard Caldwell, C. B. Ellis and Floyd C. Ramp. They have been doing excellent educational work. At times I even dare to hope that some of our candidates will be successful. Anyway, if they do not win in this election they will win eventually and the only way to accomplish this is for Socialists and sympathizers to vote the ticket straight."

Mr. Otten is secretary and treasurer of the Socialist party of Oregon. He came to Portland from San Francisco in the Fall of 1907 and has been here ever since. He devotes his entire time to the party. He lives at 349 Market street. In San Francisco he was a member of the Leagues' Union and left that city in good standing with the union.

The Socialist aspirant for Mayor is 35 years old. He has been to a great extent self-educated, but impresses one as an honest and capable man, and a deep thinker. His views are not radical, and he expresses himself emphatically as an opponent of violence and diary-speaking in the carrying out of the Socialist propaganda. He is certain that his cause must win eventually and is content simply to stand in a position to be certain of victory at every election.

LABOR ISSUES PORTRAYED

Star Theater Exhibits Strong Appeal for Justice to All.

At the Star Theater yesterday two bright and brave pictures were shown which had for subject matter the relations between the employer and employee.

While not delving into the technical philosophy of the issues, the stories were interesting, splendidly acted and contained a wealth of detail and pictorial perfection.

At the Arcade Theater a powerful picture called "A Roman Tragedy," dealing with the vendetta of Corsetta, is shown.

The Old Joy Theater offered "The State Line," a vivid tale of the West showing brave deeds of remarkable heroism.

The Tivoli exhibited a splendid Indian picture and other films.

Next Sunday the Star's feature will be another educational picture on the subject of "A Slave Fourth." This picture is endorsed by the women of the city through various clubs.

SOOTHERN IS ROMEO

Lovesick Youth Played With Masterful Art.

MARLOWE ALSO SHINES

Juliet of Noted Actress One of Best Things in Her Repertoire.

Merchant of Venice Billed for Tonight.

BY LEONE CASS RAEL.

Unhesitatingly one may make the assertion that there are no two players on the American stage of today who have matched the charm and intelligence and poetic grace displayed by E. H. Sothern and Miss Marlowe in their portrayal of the historic lovers, "Romeo and Juliet."

Play Like Suite of Beethoven.

The play itself is not unlike a suite of Beethoven. It is a Broadway of lovers who have loved young and at first sight. A poetic youth was Shakespeare when he wrote this wonderful eulogy to youth, and it is that contemporaneous ardor in it that has held these two historic characters alive in men's minds as the perfect patterns of unselfish affection. In this play, in which love is the motif, Shakespeare has created a world of entirely around the two figures of Romeo and Juliet.

Miss Marlowe, renders with a deep abiding truth and a fidelity that is exquisite, all that is passionate and mad, all the ecstatic pain in this tragic love that first glorifies and then destroys Juliet.

The purely decorative stage-Juliet we have had often—the ingenue who mouths pretensions between the employer and employee. His interpretation of the Romeo in the garden is a gentle poet; when he takes leave with Juliet in her chamber he is grave and tender, then a religion and last of all a madness.

Their first love-scene, where Juliet leans over the balcony to her sighing Romeo below in the moonlight garden, is but a duet of two astonishments, each expressing by word and look their amazement that any such spell could have fallen upon them, and surprise at their readiness for such a moment.

The Romeo of Mr. Sothern possesses above all else an exquisite passion, youthful and extravagant, and a lover's joy. His interpretation of the Romeo in the garden is a gentle poet; when he takes leave with Juliet in her chamber he is grave and tender, then a religion and last of all a madness.

With these artists' imagination comes into every line of their interpretation of the beautiful verse, and sweeps it clean of fancy. No stage simulation of love can be more moving than Miss Marlowe's in her rendition of Juliet's monologue before she drains the sleeping-potion. Into it all she puts deeper, more subtle meanings than even one in the book; her desperation is shown as an outer covering of her great love for Romeo, and there is the quality of inspiration in her piteous representation of the unhappy heroine.

Two Character Studies Shown.

True to the circumstance of Shakespeare's time is the homely group of the caplets and the immortal nurse. Other characters in the play come, glitter and flicker out, but these three, who have a bearing only as opposed to Juliet's firm resolutions, remain. The comic creation of the nurse is enacted with fine discrimination by Mrs. Eugenia Woodward, who makes the quaint, bouncing, baby-body a refreshing study as well as one of tragic gaiety.

Frederick Lewis distinguishes himself as a capable character actor in the role of Mercutio, Romeo's friend. As invariably is true of the Sothern-Marlowe productions, this one is staged magnificently. Gounod's music is used incidentally to the performance. This evening the "Merchant of Venice" will be given.
