BUSINESS MUCH AFFECTED

Revocation of Permits for Long-Established Tracks Would Mean Driving Out of Many Le-

If the proposed Ziegler bill carry next Monday, it is certain the souris will have plenty of work for a while to decide which one shall take precedence. One revokes all special remiles hitherto granted since Portland became a city, but says they may be renewed by the public service commission, while the ather provides that, in certain sections, they shall not be renewed.

While the proposed public service hill is drastic and sweeping to an extreme extent in many ways, the Ziegler measure goes further in another way, in that it absolutely takes away the power of the city officials to give away or sell for any purpose whatsower any streets within 200 fees of the water front or 1000 fact of any terminal water any streets within 2000 feet of the water front or 1000 feet of any terminal ground or depot. Streets, therefore, which have been used by railroads, marcantile firms or any other establishment under revocable permits by the Council, would be revoked forever by the Eigsler act, although the proposed public service bill provides that they shall be revoked, but may be remewed by the commission.

Courts Wil Be Kept Busy.

Courts Wil He Kept Busy.

Competent attorneys hold that, absuld both of these bills be adopted by the people next Monday, the courts would have to settle the question which should supersede. The fact that one would receive more votes than the other would not necessarily mean that the one receiving the most votes would supersede the other, the attorneys say it would result in long litigation.

For a great many years the City Council has been granting revocable permits and passing ordinances vacating streets and permitting the use of property along the waterfront and fasting than 1000 feet from terminal grounds and depots within the city limits, and, should these be revoked, it would cause much furmoil and would it is declared, cause a suspension of hundreds of thousands of dollars of business. Should the Ziegler measure be upheld by the courts over the terms of the public service bill, business along the river would become stagmant, and dock-owners and others engaged in large mercantile establishments in the vicinity would be driven out, as they would have no right to remain. Being driven from the riverfront district, it is emly reasonable to suppose thay would remove their business to another city, where initiative measures are not known and where the people do not impose such drastic restrictions.

Railroad companies, which have secured at the request of property owners revocable permits to lay spurtracks into wholesale districts along the waterfront and well within the radius prescribed by the Ziegler bill, would be compelled to take up these tracks, leaving wholesale establishments doing millions of dollars of business every year without transportation facilities such as are afforded by every other city in the country. Railroad companies, which have se-

The business along the waterfront is regarded as of such vital importance by the members of the Council that they hesitate to take such drastic action. But if the people adopt the Ziegler measure and it is upheld by the courts, it will demoralize the whole waterfront and terminal industries.

upbuilding of the entire Pacific Northwest."

After three-minute talks by representatives of many of the organizations having membership in the association, the chief subject for discussion. "Trade Relations," was taken up. A. C. Little, of Raymond, in a paper dealing with the possibilities of reciprocal trade relations with Northern jobbing points, made a sensation. He elicited hearty applause from the decidedly locally—patriotic southwestern country audience by his bald utterances relative to the unfair treatment which he averred had been sustained by Southwestern Washington at the hands of the northern portion of the state.

Mr. Little reviewed at length the recent action of the Legislature in killing Southwestern Washington's plan of road-construction, saying that he did so, not to open old sores, but to bring home to the large business interests of the Northern cities the vital importance of insisting upon proper political treatment of the southwest country, if those interests delired to prosper from the trade of that territory.

Unfairness Is Alleged.

"The ill will that exists," said Mr. Lit-tle, speaking of the strained relations he considered as having grown up between the section he represented and the Pu-get Sound cities, "was not altogether caused by the fact that the senseless Senate combine destroyed our opportu-nity in a large degree to better our roads, as it has been to the explanation made by the leading Senaters who were re-sponsible for the evil work and which has been given out through the press to the public. at his home at 240 . "For every dollar we contribute to the state, 10 cents is expended in Southwestern Washington. While for every dollar Seattle and King County contribute they get back not less than $2.50."

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together in unity," was the somewhat unexpected text taken by J. W. Spangler, vice-president of the Seattle National Bank, in the speech that followed. Acknowledging that affairs between the city which he represented and the southwestern territory seemed to be sadly awry, Mr. Spangler spoke of the effort that would be made to bring to an end such a mutually disadvantageous situation. known jewelers in Fortiand and had been in business here continuously for 22 years.
