N TIME" is the most appreciated and most welcome expression of railway service to the traveling public and to railway men the world over. Maintaining schedules over the Pennsylvania Lines has necessarily reached the nearest possible point of perfection on account of the thorough system of train operation by modern methods resulting from long experience. This achievement is possible only where every foot of track; every unit of train equipment; every device of train dispatching, protection and control;

every human being responsible, are far above the average in efficiencyall of which are conceded characteristics of these lines.
