SHANIKO, Or., Oct. 25.-(Special.)-Ignorant that J. C. Fowlie, Mayor of Shaniko, had died this morning at The Dalles, D. A. Howell, who shot the Mayor here last night, said: "Boys, I wish Fowlie had shot me instead of me choosing him."

wish Fowlis had shot me instead of me shooting him." Howell was sober and remorseful after his drunken frenzy of last night had passed away. In custody of Sheriff Chrisman and Deputy Sheriff Allen he was taken to The Dalles in an auto-mobile. Notwithstanding the cold wea-ther and raw wind, many citizens sathered on the Columbia Southern Hotel corner while Howell was conducted from Wilson's drugstore to the waiting automobile by the officers. There was no demonstration of any kind. The crowd looked on in allence. The priscrowd looked on in slience. The pris-oner took his seat beside Sheriff Chris-man in the rear, while Deputy Sheriff Allen occupied a seat heside the driver.

Phetteplace. Not once did Howell raise his eyes, as the machine turned the corner past the bank building on the door of which bung a streamer of crepe, signifying the death of the cashier. Howell left town not knowing his victim was dead.

Attack Is Unprovoked.

After being placed in the city jail After being placed in the city pail last night Howell made luquiry of Guards Vaughn and Reeder about Mr. Fowlie's condition and knew that a special train had departed for The Dalles with the wounded man. After that he dropped off into heavy slumber. Breakfast was brought in but he drank with a cut of coffee Then he was that he dropped off into heavy slumber. Breakfast was brought in but he drank only a cup of coffee. Then he was taken to the drug store to have the ruts and bruises on his head and face dressed before starting on the 65-mile overland journey to the county seat.

everland journey to the county seat. From accounts of bystanders and witnesses, Howell's attack on Mr. Fowlie was wholly unprovoked. The Ago. Mayor was conversing with some friends at the curb side of the sidewalk friends at the curb side of the sidewalk in front of the drug store when Marshal Resder came along, having Howell in custody charged with assaulting Bert James, a rancher from the Ashwood country, in a local hotel. The officer and prisoner were accompanied by Councilman Kinney on their way to the city juil to lock Howell up. As they reached the drug store Howell maid to the officer: "Wait a minute. Gus: I want to speak to Fowle." He then began telling the Mayor something about the trouble for which he was arrested. The Mayor replied: "Well, Dell, I don't know anything about that, but I think you ought to one of West's convicts, out on a con-diffonal pardon, should arrest the son of the man who started West in life, because the son was accused of violat-ing one of the game laws. Bert Heaton was the man, as her-alded in a magazine, upon whom West founded his idea of the honor system. He called Heston from the prison and sent him to Portland and other towns to learn the shoe business and to esto learn the shoe business and to es-tablish facilities at the prison for mak-ing shoes. After Heaton had done as told, he was given a conditional par-don. Friends of the Governor say that Heaton's only fault is that he was too solicitous to make good. On the other hand. West is being widely criticised for allowing a convicted murderer to hold down the position of a peace of-ficer where he would be allowed to car-ry arms if he so wished.

Shayor Asprants, in his testimony, was uncertain as to whether the 800 fraud-ulent names mentioned by John F. Spray in his testimony yesterday were finally delivered by Parkison to Sec-retary Olcoit or whether they were removed by Parkison. He was un-certain as to what had become of the This is taken to be a partial victory for the defense, as prior testimony had been to the effect that the 800 names acknowledged by Parkison to be fraudulent had been turned over to Parkison and had been filed by him. Stuart's testimony was along the line previously given relative to the workings of the Cottage Grove referendum petition committee.

Arguments between counsel consumed Arguments between counsel consumed several hours. The question of out-side counsel appearing with the Attor-ney-General was the cause of tilts, which became warm and threatened real sensations.

Judge Pipes took exception to coun sel appearing for the Secretary of State in what he intimated was an effort to defend Parkison, and was outspoken in this respect. One other interesting feature came when Colonel Wood, for the defense, outlined the plan of that side in ref-erence to its case after the state rests. He declared that the defense will repudiate the thory of law which has been offered by the piaintiff. The plaintiffs theory of law is to the effact that if three or four names on a petition are shown to be fraudulent that the burden of going ahead with the evidence shifts to the other side to show the remainder of the names are valid. Colonel Wood took the position that every name properly and legally signed had a right to be counted and that every man who honestly signed the pe-tition did so with a desire to see the apporpriations overthrown and that as a result he believed that such names should be taken into consideration by the court as valid names.

When the case is resummed in Port-land it is probable that one witness will be placed on the stand by the plaintiff and that the plaintiff will then rest his case. It was intimated hy W. S. U'Ren in court today that a
