SMITH'S RING CAREER UNIQUE

"Mysterious Billy" Only Man to Win Welterweight Title Twice.

Mysterious Billy Smith's career in Mysterious Billy Smith's career in the ring was both marvelous and unique. He was twice winner of the weiterweight title and the only man who ever "came back."

Smith's fighting ability was first discovered by Jack Fahle, of Portland, in 1882. His first important match was with Tommy West, of this city. He next stopped Charlie Gleason with a pivot punch in four rounds at Jack Dempsey's Pastime Club, which held forth where the new Multnomah Hotel now stands. His last fight here in that now stands. His last fight here in that year was with "Shadow" Maber, Aus-tralian welterweight champion, which resulted in a victory by a knockout for Smith in 27 rounds. Smith's success was so remarkable.

Gleason here in '92. Mrs. Smith tool fil and died shortly after Smith's fight with Williams. He brought the body to Portland and did not fight again for everal months.

Smith's next important fight was with Joe Walcott in New York in '95.
This fight was a five-round draw. He defended his title successfully against defended his title successfully against lesser lights until he met George Green, March 17, 1897, in the same ring that Jim Corbett lost the world's heavyweight championship to Bob Filmsimmons. They fought a few hours after the heavyweights. Smith broke his right arm in the third round and from that time on to the 12th, when his recombinations of the same of the sa ends threw up the sponge, he was

The loss of the championship upset Smith and he started to explore the primrose path. Soon he was down and ut, with few friends and unable to get recognition from the fight promoters in the meantime Walcott had tangled with Green and won the championship, 8mith went East in '98 and finally Smith went East in '98 and finally succeeded in getting a return go with Walcott. The fight took place in New York and ended in a draw. It went 25 rounds. His rejuvenation was so complete and his fight against Walcott such a finished one that Smith again was in popular demand. He fought several short bouts in New York, Boston and Philadelphia and was matched with Walcott again that year. He gained the decision in a 20-round setto and won back the championship.

After cleaning up everyone in the welterweight class, Smith was forced to make 142 pounds ringside for his fight with Kid Lavigne in San Frantisco in 1899. He knocked out Lavigne in 14 rounds.

After beating Lavigne, Smith lost the welterweight championship to Rube Ferns, in Kansas City, who in turn lost

"Making that weight killed Smith as a fighter," sald Mr. Pahle. "Billy had to work right up to the time for weighing in and it weakened him so that he was an easy mark thereafter. After that fight he started drinking harder than ever. That was his last important fight."

Smith and Tommy Tracey, who is now boxing instructor at the Multno-mah Club, fought a 29-round draw here in 1901. He fought Al Nelli here in 1910. His last appearance in the ring was against a negro heavyweight named Cameron. AROUND LOCHARD Evidence Against Accused Murderer of Barbara Holzman Not Yet Convincing.

INQUIRY TO GO FURTHER

Admission by Prisoner That He Had Read of Case After First Denying Ever Hearing of Crime Regarded by Police as Significant.

With a mass of evidence not yet con-vincing, yet sufficient to warrant fur-ther proceedings. Deputy District At-torney Firzgerald and Sheriff Stevens are confronted with a busy week, in carrying on the hearing of charges that Lewis & (Loond) Lochard is the man who killed Barbara Holzman. A score or more of prospective witnesses are booked to tell their stories during the counter week and the coming week, and it is expected that if this work is at all fruitful their statements will point to others who will be called into the case. Lochard spent yesterday at the county Jail, virtually incommunicado that provision having been requested by Deputy Fitzgerald when it became apparent that the suspect was keeping in touch with all the comment on the case, and fortifying himself in his case, an Alleged Bonsts Worry.

He betrayed no weakening, but plainly is troubled by the obstinacy of Algin McBride in adhering to his charge that Lochard boasted to him of committing the murder.

Up to the present the case against Lochard rests on numerous circumstances which have not been explained away. His alleged boasts might be dismissed as the vaporings of a drunken man-if he admitted them and declared they were such but his flat drunken man-if he admitted them and declared they were such, but his flat denial that he made such a boast raises a question of veracity between him and McBride and leads to the plain inference that if McBride is telling the truth Lochard must know that he is, and is making his denial from knowledge of guilt.

While the authorities have dismissed Mrs. Bertha Nelson from the case, feeling that she could not under any circ.

ing that she could not under any cir-cumstances identify, after this lapse of time, the man who rented from her the murder chamber, they etill place weight on her description of the man, given at the time, and tallying in every material point with Lochard's appearance. appearance.

Denial Regarded as Suspicious They also lay stress on the fact that Lochard has been shown to be a fre-quenter of the immediate neighbor quenter of the immediate neighborhood where the crime occurred. They are impressed by the fact that, after denying all remembrance of such a crime having been reported, he admitted, when confronted with a witness, that he had read of it at the time, and said "the whole town knew of it." Great importance is given to the showing that Lochard has in numerous cases displayed tendencies like those exhibited by the murderer. All of these facts, except the statement of McBride, lie outside the case made up by Frank Jennings, whom Lochard accuses of a "frame-up." Giving full credence to all that Jennings eays, the case is made stronger, Giving full credence to all that Jennings eavs, the case is made stronger, showing that Lochard abandoned business "prospects" in the neighborhood immediately after the crime, and that Jennings had an immediate intuition that he was the guilty man. While Jennings is plainly swayed by animus against the prisoner and hope of getting the money rewards, the statement of J. A. Mayeki that he voiced his suspicions of Lochard as far back as last June tends to show that his case is not tune tends to show that his case is not June tends to show that his case is not

Many Witnesses to Be Heard. During the week the investigators will probe deeply into the alleged degeneracy of Lochard, and to this end will examine many witnesses. The list includes William Gibson, an ex-convict; ex-Sheriff Worg and two girls, all of whom are expected to tell of all of whom are expected to tell of misconduct by Lochard at the Word farm; a woman and her daughter, who accuse Lochard of a similar act near the Brooklyn carshops; and several women and girls toward whom, declares Maysa, the prisoner attempted

In addition, the whole history of the man is to be traced, so far as possible, from the time he left the penitentiary and went to work at the Albina shops. A Seattle man, who is said to have seen him coming from the rooming-house where the girl was killed, is be-Ing sought for.

Even with this evidence in hand, the prosecutor does not expect to have made out his case, but with the pres-sure of inference from the facts al-ready gathered, he is impelled to go on and on, in the hope that somewhere along the line the incriminating evidence may be found. Nothing now in sight suffices on which to have a case fit to take before a jury, yet far too much exists to permit that the case be dropped.

"Yeggwoman" is the classification made by police officers of a girl found by Patrolman Black Saturday night, when he arrested Frank Farrell, who had threatened to kill her. Both she and Farrell, the officer alleges, are members of the Hall gang, most of where are not seen to be seen t whom are now doing so and so-day sentences at Linnton, tion With Dangerous Band.

The woman, who gives the name Maud Brown, lives at 15 North Ninth street. She admits that she is a member of the gang. Black's attention was drawn to her by an alleged attack drawn to her by an alleged attack made on her by Farrell, following a threat she made to leave her criminal associations.

The woman, about 23 years old, says Farrell threatened to kill her. He was arrested by Patrolman Black at Park and Burnside streets and was booked on a charge of vagrancy.

The Brown woman says that she traveled with the Hall gang all the way from San Francisco, following a sched-ule laid out by Hall, the leader. About two weeks ago the gang was rounded up in the North End by Detectives Coleman and Snow and Sergeant Burke, and received rockpile sentences. Farrell was not caught with them.
