J. B. Goddard to Be Sentenced Today by Judge Campbell.

clock this afternoon The recommendation of the jury that Goddard be paroled came to Judge Gatens only after the jurors had been polled on their verdict and discharged. One of them approached Judge Gatens and told him that he and one or two others had voted for conviction on the understanding that elemency would be exercised. The judge asked him to reduce the recommendation to writing and all the jurors signed it. It was in no sense a part of the verdict.

Judge Gatens declares that the recommendation is in no way binding on Judge Campbell, and in this statem he has the support of several attorneys who were asked for an opinion. All say that the jury's only duty was to find the defendant guilty or not guilty. and the recommendation, unless Judge Campbell chooses to take it into con-sideration, is not worth the paper it is written on. Goddard is almost certain to appeal to the Supreme Court. There are still two indictments against him charging him with contributing to the delinquency of young girls.
