and whose whereabouts the authorities were unable to ascertain, appeared Saturday night at the office of Dr. Marie D. Equi and related the events transpiring while the child was under her charge.

In the course of her story she told of the statements made to her by the mother that she did not like the child because it was not pretty. She said that Mrs. Linton had confessed to her that her dislike for the child manifested itself even before it was born and that before its birth she had three times attempted suicide. Only three and that before its birth she had three times attempted suicide. Only three times, said Mrs. Oades, who lives at 488 Clinton street, did the mother come to visit the child in the five months that she had it in her possession. Once, she says, she brought the child to see its mother, but the mother told her that it was not necessary to do so. The peculiarity of the mother in her relation to the child has led Dr. Equi and others to believe that she was mentally unbalanced, and that while in that state she mistreated the child-causing it to sustain fatal injuries.

Dr. S. E. Josephi who visited the mother yesterday, however, says he does not think she is demented.

The case of the young child is peculiar in that physicians who have come in contact with it give widely varying views. Some of them say that the injuries are no more than could have been contracted by falling, as explained by the mother, while others say they are indicative of mistreatment. The authorities incline to the former view.

CHURCH RELIEVES NEEDT.—Lents Evangelical Church, Rev. P. Conklin, pastor, has started practical benevolent work by establishing a board of relief, the object being to relieve the needy in the community. It was found that those in need of help can be relieved through organized effort better than by individual efforts. To this end the basement of the church has been turned into a supply store. From this room clothing and provisions are supplied to the poor in a way not humiliating. Rev.
Mr. Conklin investigates the cases which come under the observation of the relief board and assistance is afforded without delay. During the recent storm the relief board gave assistance to 28 families, both with clothes

Washington and Alaska will attend, and a large delegation had already taken up lodgings last night at the Carlion Hotel, which will be the foresters' headquarters this week. About 50 forestry representatives will attend the institute, which will be similar to one held here two years ago. George H. Cecil, district forester, will preside over all of the meetings. Practical forestry in all its phases, particularly as it applies to the Government forest reserves of the Northwest and of Alaska, will be the topic of discussion. Ideas and plans will be exchanged on methods of dealing with the problem of forest fires, with reforestation and other important features of the Government foresters' duties.

Youth Purs Our Blake.—The presence clation.

Mr. Mason has conducted an apple orchard in the Hood River district for 15 years and is recognized as possessing as much practical knowledge on the subject as anyone in the country.

Mr. Mason started with a small orchard and now has one of the most profitable orchards in the Hood River district.

Grafting Method Explained. Mr. Mason spoke principally on the grafting of old trees and explained in detail the manner of doing it, being as-sisted in this by lantern slides of trees in his orchard.

detail the manner of doing it, being assisted in this by lantern slides of trees in his orchard.

"I am of different opinion from many persons," he said, "as to the possibilities of grafting on old stock. It is now not considered as advisable, but I have made a success of it and there is no reason why anyone cannot do the same by the same methods and care, it stands to reason where there are a strong stock and roots, virility must exist, and it only remains to take advantage of this. It must be remembered, however, in planting a few huds on an old stock that these cannot be expected to be able to absorb all the sap, so some of the old branches should be retained until the young have reached some growth and then gradually cut off the old branches in the way you desire to train your tree.

"Apple-growing is a business, not a pastime, if commercial results are to be expected, so de not hire some one to look out for your orchard, but do it yourself. When you come to some problem that you do not understand, ask any man in the business who has made a success of it, and he will always tell you what is best to do.

"It is a fair statement that it will take nine years for an apple orchard to be self-supporting with everything up to that time paid for, and thereafter a good average income should be secured with proper care. Some years are good and some bad in both quantity and price, but I am now making $5000 annually off my orchard by close attention to every detail, and I am quite sure that I could never have acquired that much by remaining in Portland. auditorium Friday and Saturday nights. "I will tell you in Portland one thing that you may not like, but it is true. We grade our apples into four classes, as fellows: Fancy Special, Special, Portland, and Cider. In other words, what is not salable in the East is shipped to Portland, and what Portland will not take is made into cider. I find that one great present fault in apple culture is that too many varieties are attempted when the one best adapted to the district should be specialized.

TRYING SEARCH FOR OWNERS IS UNREWARDED.

In Attempt to Collect Canine Licenses Policeman Learns Only Neighborhood Gossip.

Mortuary statistics and neighborhood gossip were all that Patrolman Weilbrook, guardian of the peninsular district, could take to the police station, pursuant to a big sheaf of warrants entrusted to him to be served on persons alleged to have neglected paying their annual dog license.

The poundmaster yearly checks over his lists of the year before, and, the police say, he issues a warrant for every former dog owner who has not renewed his license. A bushel of these summonses were dumped at the police station a few days ago, and were turned over to the officers on the beats.

Wellbrook drew six of the documents,
and attempted service Saturday night.
"Is Mr. Dusenbury in?" he asked at the first house he reached.
"He is not." gaid a grim female who answered the call.
"Can you tell me when he will be?"
pursued the officer.
"Probably not soon; and, unless he brings $17 that he owes me for board, pursued the officer.

"Probably not soon; and, unless he brings 317 that he owes me for board, he'd better not come at all."

"I'm afraid not; he died last August." Wading through a mudhole and braving a savage dog, Wellbrook reached the next house on his list.
"They have moved away," was the answer to his query. "Never heard of them," was the answer at another place.

When about in despair, Wellbrook met success. One citizen came to his front door, acknowledged that he was the one named in the warrant and accepted service, though asserting that his dog had been dead for six months. Then the officer went back to his beat in time to catch a car to the station and report off duty.
