So intense has the interest been in the Presidential situation and a lively scramble among Republicans for the offices of Sheriff and District Attorscramble among Republicans for the offices of Sheriff and District Attorney, that all sight apparently has been lost of the fact that the voters of Multnomah County this year will elect five State Senators, 12 Representatives and one Joint Representative with Clackamass and Columbia Counties. Although April 2 is the latest date for filing nominating petitions, only four Republicans thus far have announced their candidacies for Representative and only one has qualified as a candidate for Senator. The timber now in the field for Representative includes A. M. Brunswick, Edwin G. Amms. George Rossman and J. H. Nolta. Of these, Amme was a member of the 1911 Legislature. R. S. The aspirations of Dr. Lane do not conform exactly with the plans of Democratic leaders. They had outlined a different programme. It included the candidacy of Mr. Gearin for the Senate and Dr. Lane for Representative from the Third District. To the party leaders, this combination looked good. The theory was that Mr. Gearin would be able to defeat Bourne or any Republican who might be nominated for the Senatorship, while Dr. Lane was counted upon to outdistance the Republican nomines for Representative. This was the way in which the situation was put up to Dr. Lane by the Democratic leaders. It did not take Dr. Lane long to discover, however, that the very Democrats who were shouting so loudly for him as the party's candidate for a two-year term in the National House of Representatives were equally noisy in advocating in the National House of Representa-tives were equally noisy in advocating Gearin's candidacy for the six-year term as Senator to succeed Bourne. Advocates of the Gearin-Lane com-bination, it is understood, did not get much further with Dr. Lane than pro-posing that lineup. It was impossible to arouse much enthusiasm in Dr. Lane

Marked Fry Found to Be Thriving When Fishery Officers Seine Grounds in State Streams.

In his monthly report to the State perial. Fish and Game Commission, Master Warden Clanton reports highly satisfactory results from the recent experiments he has conducted in marking young salmon for identification purposes prior to releasing them in the Columbia River. In thus marking the young salmon, which are not liberated until they have attained a growth of three or four inches, it has been possithree or four inches, it has been possi-ble for the fish culturists to trace these salmon and show that a much larger per cent of the young fry ac-tually reach the mouth of the river and the ocean than formerly was the case when they were released at a tender age.

Discussing the results of this experiment, Mr. Clanton in his last re-

On January 20, at Rainier, the first haul was made near the dock, where we succeeded in capturing 21 Chinook fry, three of which were marked with the mark used at the Bonneville central hatchery, while one was marked with a sliver wire in the adipose fin, which was the mark used by the United States Bureau of Fisheries. The next work was done in the Washington side of the Columbia River, about 100 miles below the hatchery, where 28 fry were taken, six of which were marked with the Honneville mark and one with a sliver wire in the forward part of the Outsel fin, which is also the mark of the United States Bureau of Fisheries. Proceeding on down the river, hauls were made at different points, and, in every instance, a number of marked fry were in evidence.

In carrying on this experiment I not only think it is beneficial for the knowledge gained by the department, but it is proving interesting to the fishermen, a number of whom assisted us in lending the net and wore agreeably surprised to learn that the fish which had been held at the hatchery until they reached sufficient size to care for the meetives before being liberated were in the best condition and were found on their way to the ocean.

According to Mr. Clanton's report,

According to Mr. Clanton's report, the recent severe sleet storm did considerable damage to the Bonneville hatchery. Because of a slide, 70 feet of one of the main flumes by which the fish ponds are supplied, was destroyed and 623,000 young fry were lost. The report shows that on the first of the month there were 22,249,582 young fry, including some brook trout, in the various hatcheries in the state, distributed as follows.
