

NO CHANGES IN LATE RETURNS

Estimates of Saturday Still Stand With 12,000 Votes Coming.

SELLING LEADS BY 6000

Roosevelt Polls Plurality of 7172 Over Taft and Wilson is Ahead of Clark by Less Than 1000.

Additional returns from only seven counties were obtained Sunday, totaling practically 1000 votes. These figures tend to change in no way the estimates made on the preceding day on any of the nominations on the Republican ticket. In the additional returns were three precincts from Multnomah County and additional returns from Douglas, Lake, Lane, Linn, Polk and Yamhill. The total vote counted is $2,505, which, it is believed, is about 11,500 short of the complete returns.

In this total Roosevelt has 25,391, La Follette 20,194, Taft 18,219. Roosevelt's incomplete plurality over La Follette is $197, over Taft is $10,000. La Follette's plurality over Taft is 1875.

Selling Leads by 6000. The additional returns on United States Senator made practically no change in the plurality of the vote shown for Ben Selling over Jonathan Bourne, the favorable vote for Selling in the country practically being offset by the favorable vote for Bourne in Multnomah County.

The votes counted on Senator now total 62,000, of which Mr. Selling has 23,497, Bourne 23,822, Roosevelt and Morton 14,681. Selling's plurality 6905. In the Second Congressional District N. J. Sinnott's lead over W. H. Ellis has not changed, he now having a plurality of 446. The corrected totals are as follows: Sinnott 3494, Ellis 2658, Rusk 2178, Cochran 2590, C. Hoover 1689 and B. W. O'Leary slightly increased his lead over Frank Fields for Secretary of State. His majority with the added returns is 2458. O'Leary has a total of 31,474, Fields 28,616.

Mickle's Gain is Big. Corrections in the figures and totals made a material addition to Mickle's plurality over Cottel in the contest for Dairy and Food Commissioner. Mickle's lead is now 1632. The vote follows: Mickle 16,664, Cottel 15,031, Edwards 7995, Lea 14,422.

Alcholson's lead in the contest for 16,293 for Railroad Commissioner, with Schulderman 7928 and Stayton 7391; Alcholson's plurality 8255. On the Democratic ticket there is an interesting contest for the nomination for Congress in the Second District. Returns have been sent in, in part, from nine of the 14 counties in the district. These returns give Graham a lead of less than 100 votes. The totals reported stand as follows: Casey 1215, Graham 1368; Graham's majority 81.

Wilson Leads by 1000. Woodrow Wilson apparently will not have a walk-away in obtaining the Oregon preference for the nomination for President. While Multnomah County went strong for Governor Wilson several of the other counties gave Champ Clark heavy pluries. The result is that on the face of the incomplete returns Governor Wilson is leading his opponent by less than 1000 votes in a total count of 12,419. This total probably represents two-thirds of the Democratic vote cast in the state.

On the Democratic ticket the count is not so complete in Multnomah County as it is on the Republican ticket, so there is little prospect that Wilson's plurality will be materially reduced by the official returns. It is believed that probably about 75 per cent of the Democratic vote cast in the state. The figures available give the following: Wilson 6337, Clark 5432, Harmon 530, Wiley 4175, 454.

Harry Lane will probably have several thousand plurality for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator. The complete figures are as follows: Lane 5926, Pierce 2191, Coshov 2042, Miller 148, Lane's plurality 3819. The intervention of Sunday, soon following the primaries has made the obtaining of complete returns more difficult than usual.

AUTO IN SAHARA DESERT

We stood on the edge of the desert and looked out over it. Then we talked of other things, neither wishing to be first to suggest that the weather was bad. We read in the guide-book: "Biskra to Touggourt, about 130 miles; a track possible for wheeled traffic, but sandy in places and very hot in the day. The weather, it would be imprudent to venture upon it on a bicycle or in an automobile." Next day we looked again, and saw that the words "very hot" were of both into words: "Well, I suppose we shall have to try it!"

The modest traveler, like ourselves, soon discovers that the sandy plain of his dream days. He finds, from time to time, great or little spreading mounds, or dunes, of golden sand-called "sahara" and which, when the wind blows, are blown over his head, and do not sink ankle deep, and these, wind-created and wind-impelled, move forward almost like live things. Engineers employed in laying our desert railways have made costly and even fatal mistakes by not recognizing the fact, now established, that "desert dunes are not anchored or stationary bits of sand, but mobile masses, advancing at a very appreciable rate in a definite direction." These dunes begin to move, according to another scientific observer, as soon as a light breeze blows; the air is perpetually charged with sand in a moderate breeze; and during storms the progress may be nearly two inches an hour, while their average advance is 50 feet a year. Many a once flourishing oasis is now buried forever beneath the great sand dunes, which, day after day, slowly widening, silence all; nothing stops their insidious advance: "In some localities extensive and prosperous settlements have been overwhelmed and blotted out of existence. They form, however, but a minute part of the surface of the desert. This is a mass of gypsum, clay and stones, dotted over every few yards with mounds from six inches to three feet high. The origin of these is a tough bush of a kind of succulent samphire, with a small cream-colored acacia-like flower, and tamarisk with woody stem and gray leaf. These grow very slowly in dense close masses, and when they die and decay they form a solid mass. But for these an automobile could travel fast in almost any direction. As it is, to go a hundred yards, a score or more of them have to be

COMPLETE VOTE BY PRECINCTS ON SHERIFF IN 182 PRECINCTS.

Complete unofficial returns from all but ten out of a total of 193 precincts in the county give Fitzgerald a plurality of 298 over McAllister for the Republican nomination for Sheriff. The vote by precincts follows:

Table with columns for Precinct, Fitzgerald, McAllister, and Total. Lists 182 precincts and their respective vote counts.

levelled, and since it takes five minutes' hard labor with the shovel to level a single one, any lengthy progress is very slow and fatiguing.

FRANKFURT NOT NEARER

GERMAN VESSEL 140 MILES FROM SCENE OF DISASTER.

Captain Reports on Efforts to Go to Assistance, After Being Told Not to Interfere.

BREMEN, April 22.—The North German Lloyd Steamship Company has issued the following statement after having taken under advisement the testimony of Harry S. Bride, the assistant wireless operator of the Titanic, regarding the steamer Frankfurt:

"We sent a wireless message to the Frankfurt and have just received the following answer: 'The steamer Frankfurt turned north immediately after getting the signal of distress and arrived at 10:50 at the scene of the disaster. The dig-

levelled, and since it takes five minutes' hard labor with the shovel to level a single one, any lengthy progress is very slow and fatiguing.

WOMEN SAVED BY ASTOR

Survivors Tell of Colonel's Abrupt Command That They Be Placed.

CHICAGO, April 22.—Mrs. Ida Hippach and her daughter, Jean, survivors of the wreck of the Titanic, who arrived in Chicago last night, yesterday, said they were saved by Colonel John Jacob Astor, who forced the crew of the last lifeboat to wait for them.

"We saw Colonel Astor in the place Astor in a boat and assure her that he would follow later," said Mrs. Hippach. "He turned to us with a smile and said: 'Ladies, you are next.' The officer in charge of the boat protested that the craft was full and the seamen started to lower it. Colonel Astor exclaimed: 'Hold that! Wait a moment. I am a man accustomed to be obeyed,' and continued Mrs. Hippach, 'and the men did as ordered. The boat had been lowered past the upper deck, and the Colonel took us to the next deck below and put us in the boat through a port-

FEDERAL INQUIRY RESUMES TODAY

Officers of Company and 37 of Titanic's Crew Go Before Senate Committee.

ISMAI DENIES PROTEST

French Government Assures United States of Co-operation—Norway's Navigation Law to Be Used as Example.

WASHINGTON, April 22.—Mr. Ismay has made no protest to the British Ambassador, Mr. Bryce, because of the holding of members of the Titanic's crew as witnesses and added that he had come to the investigating committee in any way he could. He added that he had not talked with Huntington Wilson, the Acting Secretary of State, about the question.

France Pledges Co-operation. Assurances of the co-operation of the French government with the United States further to safeguard human life at sea were given yesterday by Ambassador Jusserand to Senator Smith. Ignoring formalities of proceeding through the State Department, Ambassador Jusserand called in person upon the senator and assured him of the desire of the French government to co-operate in improving conditions at sea.

Objections Manifest. Senator Smith said yesterday that no notice or intimation either from officials or members of the crew of objection to the committee's course had reached him.

"I am proceeding on the theory that what we will obtain will be as valuable to them as to the United States," he said.

Major Arthur Piechen, of Toronto, has notified Senator Smith that today he will be in Washington to put his story into the record. Louis Klein, a Hungarian member of the Titanic crew, has been subpoenaed at Cleveland, O. He will appear before the committee to testify on the sinking of the ship that city of his experiences in the wreck.

A feature of the forthcoming investigation will be the inquiry into the wireless communication as the Titanic was sinking. An effort will be made to ascertain the exact location of the sinking, the regular ship which responded to the Titanic's signal of distress. It is desired to ascertain whether the Frankfurt actually was nearer the sinking ship than the Carpathia, as Operator Bride estimated the Frankfurt to have been, judging from the strength of the electric spark in the wireless communication. Whether the Frankfurt operator will be called as a witness could not be learned yesterday.

Crew's Operator Summoned. Secretary Meyer of the Navy Department called yesterday on members of the committee and gave assurances that the wireless operator of the Chesapeake, who endeavored to get detouring the disaster from the Carpathia, on the latter's way to New York, would be held subject to the committee's orders.

Senator Nelson, chairman of the committee, expects to have published today a translation of Norwegian navigation laws, which the committee will consider in making recommendations to the Senate.

"If any such laws as the strict Norse requirements had been in force in Great Britain," said Senator Nelson today, "there would have been no such death list. They provide that lifeboats and other lifesaving apparatus shall be tested to take care of every passenger and member of the crew. There, the lifesaving apparatus is based upon the number of passengers, while in Great Britain it is based upon tonnage."

CLARK NEBRASKA'S CHOICE

Harmon Is Second in Race and Wilson Is Third.

LINCOLN, Neb., April 22.—Corrected tabulation of the Nebraska Presidential preference vote, including returns from 880 precincts, give Roosevelt 21,242, Taft 19,692, La Follette 10,275, Clark 14,031, Harmon 11,241, Wilson 8860.

It is believed that this included 50 per cent of the vote of the state. Representative George W. Norris continues to lead Senator Norris Brown for the Republican Senatorial nomination, the vote from 998 precincts being 12,807 to 11,241.

Brown 21,051, Norris 23,753; Democratic Senatorial figures from 773 precincts are: Thomason 6755, Shallenberger 13,414. State Senator Moorehead has defeated R. L. Metcalfe for Democratic gubernatorial nomination. Moorehead received 15,115 votes in 512 precincts to 12,889 for Metcalfe.

AT THE THEATERS

"A NIGHT OUT." A Comedy in Three Acts, by May Robson and C. T. Dacey—Presented at the Heilig Theater. CAST: Gramnum... May Robson, Jack... Jack Storey, Betty... Faye Cusick, Paul... Paul Decker, Mrs. Duncan... Lotta Blake, Mrs. Haslem... Edith Conrad, Grace... Margaret Boland, Mr. Descon... C. C. Wynne, Percy... Eddie Leaman, Mr. Staples... Lewis E. Parmenter, Peters... George Hall, McMahon... E. Collins, Mitsa... Louis Rand.

JUST before the last curtain of "A Night Out" May Robson stepped out from the other players and made a regular oration of her company in attentive delight to the three acts of her charming play—the nicest sort of a goodbye. She did it in poetry—real poetry—not a mere rhythmic flourish. It transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying young—the sort of advice that should be passed in every man's hat and in the corner of every woman's mirror. Miss Robson preaches it not only in the goodbye verse, but throughout the play. "A Night Out" is its gentlest quiet humor, then again it transcends all bounds and the audience stops and gazes at the performer. It is the verse—a homely one on staying