FAITH IN RELIGION KEPT

Heiress Changes Name Slightly in Hope of Avoiding Limelight in Future-Chance to Work Is

All She Asks.

NEW YORK, May 10 .- (Special.)-Seeking religion as her consolation and relying upon works of charity and self-dealal to bring forgetfulness, Violet Edmands, the Massachusetts helress who was to have become the bride of Rev. C. T. Richeson, is working in the slams of the lower East Side, in New York. She has changed her name Yerk. She has changed her name slightly, being known now as Violet Edwards, and it is said she hopes that the past may be wholly forgotten. It was in the hope that he might marry Mas Edmands that Richeson murdered Miss Avis Linnell several months ago. When the first shock of the confession of the minister were off, Miss Edmands family advised that she take a long European trip, one that would extend long beyond the time when Richeson should have gone to death in the son should have gone to death in the electric chair, an event set for May 19. But Miss Edmands, despite the dis-closure that the clergyman in whom she had such great faith and whom she was had such great faith and whom she was to marry was a hypocrite and a coward, did not for that reason lose her faith in religion. Indeed, she turned toward it, and out of prayers for guidance came her determination to do settlement work in some district of poverty in a city far from her own home.

Mission Work Adopted. For months past "Misa Edwards" has been a worker on the staff of the Prot-estant Episcopal City Mission Society. She has made her headquarters at St. Barnabas House in Mulberry street and at God's Providence House in Mul-berry street, and otherwise her efforts. berry street, and otherwise her efforts have carried her into the meanest of Miss Edmands was seen by a friend at St. Barnabas House not many days ago and said: "I am here to seek occupation—to get away from it all. I want to do semething different and new. I love my work here, and it is good work. I hope to centinue it, for my heart is in it.

Rest Found in Voluntary Labor. "I have been giad to get away from the troubles I have had, and I have found rest here. I have been away from all that has worried me so sorely, and I hope to remain in this work. My work at God's Providence House is purely voluntary, and as such it is very pleasant. I have always wished to do something of that sort, and now I have found my opportunity.

Treally hope the whole dreadful case will die down. The idea of being brought back into the limelight is more shocking than I can express. I simply ask to be permitted to do my work quietly and to be relieved of too much ublic interest in myself, my where-

Historic Vessel Fired at San Francisco That Owners Can Get Copper and Brass From Hull. Shield Is Saved

SAN FRANCISCO, May 10 .- (Special.) -In striking contrast to the recent burial of the battleship Maine with naval honors, the Pensacola, famous as a ship of line in Admiral Farragut's fleet in Mobile Bay during the Rebellion, was sacrificed to crackling flames for pecuniary profit here today. As the flames ate through her old seasoned bulwarks and smoke enveloped the skeleton of the once proud flag-ship of the American Navy in many home and foreign ports, great eyes of fire showed through the portholes of her three decks.

NEW YORK, May 10 .- (Special.)-Vincent Astor, who, not yet 21, is practically the sole master of his $60,000,-000 fortune, intends to keep as far away from matrimony as possible—at least for a few years.

"I am not thinking of marrying any-one," he said today. "I am devoting my time wholly to my course in Har-

A statement given out at the Astor offices here makes definite announcement of Vincent Astor's plans for a trip to England this Summer. The statement says:

Scores of designing mothers hav been precning their daughters in an ef-fert to capture him. They consider the present time, when he is grief-stricken over the death of his father, whom he idelized, as fraught with possibilities. The chance of reflex action—of catching his heart and sentiments on the rebound—has not been overlooked and many mammas have kept many daughers as near the limelight as possible then he has appeared. Rumors Have No Rest.

Ever since he attained the stature of manhood, Vincent Astor's name has been almost constantly linked with that of some girl. As fast as he de-nied that he was engaged or even in love with one, another name would be whispered about and it would be ru-mored that at last he had met his fate. BANQUET AND TRIPS PLANNED

More than so,000 various cat-nations, symbolizing purity, beauty and love will be taken from the hot-houses today and prepared for the commemoration, which is expected to be far more general in Portiand this year than at any time since the cus-tom was established in 1908. Florists are prepared for an exceptionally big rush and expect to have plenty of carnations to meet the de-mand. The warm weather of the last week has brought the carnations out in thousands and they will be in per-fect condition for the market today and tomorrow. In compliance with the custom, white carnations will be worn for the mem-ory of mothers dead, while other col-ors will be used for honoring mothers

Today will see Mothers' day decorations in all the florist shops. Decora-tors were busy last night preparing unique and beautiful displays of the pretty flowers and adorning the win-dows with placards announcing Moth-ers' day, what it means and how it should be observed. Retail stores reshould be observed. Retail stores report numerous orders for large numbers of the flowers.

Mothers' day will be well observed in the churches. Nearly all of the ministers have announced their intention to speak on the subject of "Mother," at both the morning and the evening services. Special floral decorations will grace the pulpits of most of the churches.

The Mothers' day idea originated in 1908 in Philadelphia. The founder was Miss Anna Jarvis, who cancelved the flower-wearing idea in the desire to commemorate the anniversary of her mother's death. Following this she wrote a letter to a Philadelphia newspaper suggesting the observance of the day by everyone. This made such an impression that that same year the commemoration was held in many parts of the United States. Since then it has spread to practically every part of this country and to many parts of of this country and to many parts of Europe.

Miss Jarvis suggested the white carnation as the Mothers' day flower. "Its whiteness stands for purity; its form, beauty; its fragrance, love; its wide field of growth, charity; its lasting qualities, faithfulness—all a true mother's attributes," she wrote.
