

COUNSEL IN SUGAR LITIGATION CLASH

Government Desires to Introduce Testimony of Late Henry O. Havemeyer.

CASE TYPICAL, IS CHARGED

Declaration That Tariff is Mother of Trusts Quoted From Evidence Before Industrial Commission in 1904.

NEW YORK, May 14.—Shall the voice of Henry O. Havemeyer, dead five years, be heard in the Government's dissolution suit against the so-called sugar trust?

Counsel for the Government and the defense clashed over this question today in the first session held to take testimony in the suit. When the session adjourned the question was still undecided.

The suit against the refining company was begun before Special Examiner Price. This action with the suit against the United States Steel Corporation, makes two big cases brought by the Government for the dissolution of two so-called trusts, now under way in the city.

Testimony Eight Years Old.
The testimony of Mr. Havemeyer which Mr. Wise sought to have written into the record was given before the Congressional Industrial Commission June 14, 1904.

Mr. Wise said Mr. Havemeyer, the ruling spirit of the sugar trust, testified that the tariff was the mother of trusts and that he was "in business for himself and not for his competitors."

The testimony, Mr. Wise argued, "presented in concise form the practices of the so-called sugar trust in building up a monopoly."

Capital Twice Increased.
Certified copies of the certificates of incorporation and increase of stock of the American Sugar Refining Company were introduced. These showed that the company was incorporated in New Jersey on January 18, 1891, with a capital of $50,000,000, divided equally between common and preferred stock issues and that the capital was increased to $75,000,000 on March 12, 1892, and to $90,000,000 on October 10, 1901, the increase being in equal amounts of common and preferred stock.

Certificates also were introduced covering the incorporation of the American Sugar Refining Company of New York; Franklin Sugar Refining Company of Philadelphia; Spreckels Sugar Refining Company of Philadelphia and other corporate defendants.

GRIEVING HUSBAND GHOU violently and collapsed when the coffin bearing the body of his wife to the grave was taken from the house. It was necessary to take him to bed and give him medical attention.

Wife's Body Disinterred.

As soon as it was dark Monday night he armed himself with a spade, a shotgun and an ax. Then he went to the cemetery, where his wife had been buried and sought out the fresh grave. Hillegan is 56 years old and in frail condition and it took all night for him to reach the box that held the coffin. This he smashed with an ax. The lid was removed in the same manner, but more gently, from the coffin.

Hillegan lifted the body of his wife tenderly from the coffin and, staggering under his crushing mental and physical burden, began the walk two miles to his home. How he succeeded in making his long trip his relatives do not know. They do know, however, that he trudged through the gate and back to a shed in the rear of his house, shortly after sunrise. He placed the body tenderly upon a bench in the shed, raised the head slightly with a pillow, and then went to the house for food. Relatives remonstrated with him, but Hillegan sternly reproved them. He seized an old shotgun and ordered them to leave him alone with his wife.

Food Placed at Dead Lips.

"You robbed me of her once before. You can't do it now," he said.
He took food and a bottle of camphor to the shed and began the work of trying to restore life in the lifeless body. He rubbed the camphor upon the cold brow, then offered food to the lips that refused to open.

This he continued for hours. Meanwhile word had gone out through the village that Hillegan was trying to work a miracle. A crowd congregated about the grounds, but nobody ventured in. Hillegan made occasional trips to the fence, trained his gun on the more curious and warned them against interfering with him. The warning was enough.

Tonight, when he realized that his efforts were in vain, his reason gave way. Officers removed him to jail and the body if his wife was returned to the grave.

WIFE DENIES OWN MOTHER

Affidavit Charges Parent Tried to Break Up Family.

SPOKANE, Wash., May 14.—(Special.)—Charging her mother with interfering in her family affairs, Mrs. Addie Anderson made affidavit before Justice Fred Witt today that it had never been her intention to persecute her husband for wife desertion.

The wife alleges that the arrest of Anderson was caused by her mother, Mrs. T. H. Holsinger, who she says, in the affidavit protecting her husband, Mrs. Anderson says that she is still living with Mr. Anderson and that he has never refused to support her and that he has not deserted her. Anderson will be released.

Domestic Science Course Proposed.

ALBANY, Or., May 14.—(Special.)—A domestic science course may be established in the Albany public schools next year. The members of the board went to Corvallis today to inspect the domestic science department in the Oregon Agricultural College and to become familiar with the method of conducting such a department of school work.

VALE MOURNS DEAD

Davenport's Grave Lies Beside Those of Pioneers.

SURROUNDINGS ARE SIMPLE

Old Cemetery Where Great Artist is Buried is Guarded by Wooden Fence—Monastery Near Lends Air of Peace.

A fresh mound of earth that will soon turn to green in the family lot in the old town cemetery at Silverton marks the final resting place of Homer Davenport. The funeral was Monday.

The old cemetery is surrounded by a wooden fence, the graves are marked with bare wooden stakes or crosses or unpretentious stone monuments and the ground is over-run with briar and is green with tufts of grass sent forth by Nature uninduced. A dusty road passes the cemetery, and a little distance down its way is Silverton—Davenport's home town. Around the edge of the town runs the old Abiqua River, whose gentle murmur and cool-born summer breezes drift gently over "God's acre" there.

The valley around is broad and stretches from the low Waldo hills that flank the town of Silverton to the base of the ridges that enclose the landscape. Rising abruptly out of the farm-checked plain scores two miles away, is a hill, approaching in its solitude the magnitude of a mountain. Like a sentinel over the scene it stands.

On the crest of this mountain rises an abbey, massive and tall and gray, and surrounded by a huge glittering cross, all like some monitor of the other world. Here many times a day black-robed monks repair to the chapel to recite their complines and their matins and their vespers; here they devote themselves to meditating on life's destiny and offer up their prayers for the living and the dead. The old sombre monastery lends an air of peacefulness to the scene.

erations who had listened in open-mouthed wonder to their elders as they recounted incidents in the life of Silverton's celebrated son—those all gathered there for the last simple rites.

An appreciation of his personal worth, the recitation of a poem, the playing of a dirge by the band—these were the ceremonies, and as the crowd left the cemetery, the old prior who had built the monastery that overlooks the cemetery, did that which had seemed to have been forgotten—out of the fullness of his soul he repeated the Lord's prayer.
