SEATTLE "COPS" ACTIVE

Twice Stop Their Chief and Slover, of Portland, for "Joy-Riding."
Chief of Police Slover went to Seattle over the holiday, to address a religious meeting, went joyriding and came very near not getting back. Motorcycle policemen stopped him in Lake Washington Park, once for speeding and once for not displaying a license number.
Police Captain Sullivan, of Seattle, was the real delinquent, as he was in charge of the car. On receiving a visit from his brother officer, he ordered the police automobile and the pair went for a tour of the city. They were howling along the driveway of the park, when a policeman rode athwart their bow and flagged them down. "Going too fast," he said. "Who are you?"
Captain Sullivan explained, and the car started again, only to be halted within half a mile by another policeman, who demanded to know why the car bore no number. It was fun for the visiting chief, who counselled the officer to do his duty and show no leniency, but Captain Sullivan was able to "square" the trouble without arrest.
Last year about 70 cases of smallpox were reported in London and 200 in the rest of England.
