Chopin's Heart-Wringing Funeral March Saddens Court in Roberts' Trial.

PRISONER IS UNCONCERNED

Man Accused of Slaying Donald Stewart Faces Veniremen While Two Burial Processions Headed by Bands Pass.

To the accompaniment of the heartwringing strains of Chopin's funeral narch Jack Roberts faced, in Judge orrow's department of the Circuit Court yesterday, the beginning of his PUBLIC ASKED TO HELP HOME trial for the murder of Donald Stawart, en the White House road, March 29, By a strange coincidence two funeral parties elected to pass the Courthouse during the preliminary proceedings, each headed by a military band, and while Roberts, faced veniremen answering as to their qualifications to hear his cause, the terrible direc range through the countracem through the courtroom the uncultivated prisoner paid no heed to the music.

The prisoner betrayed that he had other burdens on his mind, as he was extremely restless throughout the day, and sat most of the time with nervous fingers playing about his mouth. An expression of boylah petulance was his most persistent expression. Once, when attorneys for the state suggested that in the event the defense chose a pica of insanity it must inferentially admit of insanity it must inferentially admit the commission of the homicide by Roberts, he winced and turned inquir-ingly toward his lawyers, evidently impressed by the perilous dilemma pro-posed by his prosecutors.

Three Jurors Passed for Cause.

He was closely questioned by Attorney Majarkey on his affiliations with the Machinists' Union, evidently with reference to the attorney's recent appearance as a defender of Bert Hicks, acquitted on a charge of killing a member of the same union. Ackley said he did not belong to the organization. The session adjourned with the question before the court whether Ackley. tion before the court whether Ackley, as a prospective taxpayer, is eligible to the jury.

Alleged Shoplifter Furnishes $250 and Is Released.

A woman who, circumstances lead the polic to believe, is a professional shoplifier, was arrested in a department store by Detectives Coleman and Snow, Monday night, and, in suite of a pretense that she had no friends and no money, has been mysteriously supplied with $250 ball and is at liberty. She gives the name Mrs. Sulla, and is about 30 years old.

The detectives were called when the woman was caught in the act of filling a false pocket with merchandise. She was taken to detective headquarters, where she detached the receptacle from under her skirt and attempted to secrete it. It was found and is held as evidence. In apparent poverty, the woman was locked up, under bail of $250, but the officers on inquiring for her yesterday, were surprised to learn that the surety had been furnished.

Three Jurors Prased for Cause.

Three jurors were passed for cause at the end of the session, and a fourth probably will take his place beside them if it is found that the law sanctions the calling of a juror who is assessed but not yet on a completed assessment roll.

Aside from routine questions as to his, the defense asked little except as to the veniremen's attitude toward a plea of insanity, while the state insisted upon knowing the prospective juror's attitude toward capital punishment, w. I.
