Business Men Marvel When Shown Interior of Lipman-Wolfe Structure.

FIXTURES, PORTLAND-MADE

Seventh Floor Has Rare Features and Employees Will Have Spacious Rest Room—Open to Public September 3.

When a party of business men entered the handsome new Lipman, Wolfe & Co. building yesterday afternoon, they expected to take a cursory glimpse of the interior and hurry back to their respective offices. But they had no conception of the magnitude and the attractiveness of the establishment, and they remained for more than two hours to inspect a succession of surprises that awaited them on every floor.

Piloted by Adolphe Wolfe, senior member of the firm, and Theodore Doyle, Paulson Beach, the Portland architects who designed and superintended the construction of the ten-story building, the guests were whisked to the top floor in the battery of smoothly moving elevators. There they learned that virtually a half block of floor space will be used for the storage of goods and the delivery of goods to the street side of the building. The goods are opened and packed in the battery of elevators, and the goods are then taken to the street side of the building. The goods are then taken to the street side of the building.

OWL CARS BEING URGED

PETITIONS SENT TO MAYOR URGING FAVORABLE ACTION.

Persons Compelled to Work at Night Ask Executive to Sign Ordinance Recently Passed.

On the ground that owl cars in Portland would benefit many persons who are required to work at night and who now have to walk home because of no streetcar accommodations after 1:30 A. M., employees of numerous concerns are urging Mayor Rusk to sign the owl car ordinance passed by the City Council.

The Mayor has been kept busy in the last two days answering telephone calls from persons urging him to sign the ordinance. He still has the proposed measure under consideration and probably will affix his signature to it in the near future. The ordinance is not considered in the form desired, inasmuch as some of the lines on which the owl cars must be operated are conflicting.

OFFICERS CONDEMN GRILL

At the hearing in the grill license case, Police Officer Black, Wardie, Martin and Sergeant Harms testified as to the conditions they found in the grill while it was operated during the Elks' convention. Sergeant Harms said he had seen minors in the grill and had noticed what he believed were violations of the law. "It was the most flagrantly conducted joint in the city," he testified. "I saw liquor being sold to drunken persons and to women without meals, which is a violation of the law." He said liquor had been sold to women without meals. Other officers testified that they had visited the place and had seen a violation of the law. "I saw liquor being sold to drunken persons and to women without meals, which is a violation of the law." No description could be given of the prowler further than that he wore a soft, brown hat. It is believed how- ever, that he is the same man who followed George and his wife from a car to their home Sunday night, when George was carrying a considerable sum of money. The boldness of the prowler in firing at the householder on his own premises has aroused apprehension in the neighborhood.
