

REBELION FAINTING, OFFICIALS THINK

Washington Reports Show Irresolute Nature of More Recent Movements.

LEADERSHIP IS LACKING

Superior Mobility of Insurgent Bands May Prolong Conflict for Months—El Tigre Mines Operating Again.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 19.—Further evidence of the weakening of the Oregano rebellion is conveyed to the State and War Departments in the latest reports from military officers and consultants of the movements of the various rebel leaders operating in Northern Mexico.

These movements are so irresolute as to satisfy the officials that no longer are the various generals acting under common leadership.

Officials here say reports show that nowhere do the rebels feel disposed to meet the government forces in action except where they can attack some small town or mining camp garrisoned by a force much smaller than their own. It is expected this sort of warfare may be kept up several weeks or even months, in view of the superior mobility of the well mounted rebels who are living on the country and are free from heavy equipment or artillery.

Colonel Pascual Orozco, Sr., and other rebel officers captured by Captain Mitchell, at Presidio, Texas, have been turned over to the United States civil authorities at Marfa.

The mining plant at El Tigre, which was captured recently by the rebels and retaken by the federals a few hours later, has begun to operate again.

Robbing and looting are still prevalent in the neighborhood of Magdalena.

FEW VOTES CAST IN VERMONT ELECTION

Statisticians Can't Forecast November Result From Returns.

BULL MOOSE DISAPPOINTS

Roosevelt Party Fails to Make Inroads Into Democratic Strength. Republicans Expect Recruits.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Sept. 19.—The state election in Vermont last week was not an entire success from any viewpoint and is no sure indication of what is to follow in the National campaign this Fall. In fact, the Vermont result was rather a disappointment to the leaders of each of the three big political parties, for no party polled the vote that was anticipated, and no party was able to derive much genuine encouragement from the result.

Yet judging from newspaper editorials and the interviews of politicians it would appear that the Vermont election satisfied everybody. The fact that the Republicans elected their candidate for Governor more than 25,000 votes. It has been an old superstition in politics that the Republicans elected their candidate for President in years when Vermont went Republican by more than 25,000. The Taft enthusiasts, however, recognize that the Republican majority was very little over 25,000.

On the part of Democrats there is elation because their candidate, facing the opposition of two other candidates, received a larger vote than was ever before given a Democratic candidate for Governor of Vermont, save in 1906. His aside, this is the truly surprising feature of the Vermont election, for it would seem, on its face, to indicate that the Bull Moose party had not succeeded in making inroads into the Democratic ranks, notwithstanding the personal appeals of Colonel Roosevelt in his speeches in Vermont.

The Bull Moose joy over the Vermont result shows out of the fact that they polled over 15,000 votes, as a new party that had been in existence less than two months. They maintain that if they could roll up 15,000 votes in less than two months in rock-ribbed Vermont, they can do much better in three months in the country at large, and many of them go as far as to claim the Vermont result foreshadows Roosevelt's election in November.

A study of Vermont election figures discloses a number of interesting things. For instance, in 1904, the year of Roosevelt's election, the Republican candidate for Governor of Vermont received 48,112 votes in September, and Roosevelt two months later polled only 40,452. Moreover, it is found that Vermont always casts a larger vote for Governor in September than it does for President in November, and this seems to be true regardless of party. If that be true this year, and all parties are affected alike, none of the Presidential candidates will receive as heavy a vote in November as was cast for their gubernatorial candidates last week.

Beyond any reasonable doubt, the Vermont result contained more encouragement for the Democrats than for either other party. In the first place, with the Democratic candidate for Governor receiving 2000 more votes than were given the Democratic candidate in 1910 and 4000 more votes than the Republican candidate in 1908, it would seem reasonable to conclude that the Bull Moose appeals had not influenced the Democrats of Vermont to any appreciable degree, and if the appeals have as little effect in other states, Woodrow Wilson would appear to have ground for expecting to receive practically the solid Democratic vote in November.

There is further encouragement for the Democrats growing out of the fact that the Democrats might have received a vote of Vermont was nearly 5000 less than the total Republican vote for Governor in 1908, the last Presidential year in which the Democrats carried Vermont was not even; the Republicans outnumbered the Progressives five to three, but this proportion will not carry in all states, but will be reversed in Progressive strongholds. But there will be division, and it is quite generally doubted either the Republican party or the Progressive third party will be able to overcome the practically solid Democratic vote.

Johnson Admits Coming Defeat. For the Progressives, Governor Hiram Johnson, in a running mate, had virtually confessed that his party cannot win and does not expect to win in November. The Colonel himself made no such admission, but follows his usual custom and claims he will be elected. On the Republican side, Chairman Hillis declares that it is not the expectation of the third party to win, but so to divide the Republican strength as to assure Democratic success, and this, he thinks, is the real significance of the Vermont election.

It has been observed that a few strongly partisan Republican papers expressed the hope that the Vermont election will prove of benefit to the Republican party, in that it will demonstrate that the third party cannot muster enough strength to elect a Governor in November, and in this way induce thousands of former Republican voters to return to their old party, in order to avert the election of a Democratic Governor. This hope, however, is voiced by papers that are strongly partisan, and there has been nothing in the campaign thus far to indicate any widespread party pride on the part of Republicans.

With the sickness of Secret Service Agent Connell, who is confined to his home, the search for Roosevelt's now celebrated missing volume, "The Second Roman Republic," has slackened, and the identity of the conscientious thief awaits discovery. Another drawback to the search for the history is the fact that nobody has come forward and posted a reward of $50 for the return of the book. Until Mr. Connell recovers and some philanthropic individual produces the reward money, Manager MacRae, of the Hotel Oregon, is inclined to despair locating the volume, which so completely and mysteriously disappeared from Roosevelt's room at the hotel the day he visited Portland.

For traveling, salesmen there has been considerable money following after him, with which it may be converted into a table.

TAFT CLUB IS ASSURED

CLARK COUNTY REPUBLICANS SHOW ACTIVITY.

Predictions Made That Old Party Will Be Victorious—Roosevelt's Trip Here Cost Him Votes.

VANCOUVER, Wash., Sept. 19.—(Special.)—That a strong Taft club will be formed in Clark County seems assured, and such an announcement has been made by the Republican county central committee.

The primaries are now over, and as the Republicans, who have always been strong here, have a full ticket in the field, they feel that they will win this year again and give Taft a big majority.

It is generally believed here that Theodore Roosevelt, by his recent action in cutting out Vancouver from his itinerary when he was to have spoken at the Clark County fair, has lost several thousand votes in this county alone. The farmers had counted on hearing Roosevelt make a speech at their county fair, and they had planned to go to hear him. But at the last minute his plans were changed. It is believed that the Roosevelt Progressive party is not gaining strength and that the Republican party, split though it has been through many months, will become united and present a solid front at election time, and will line up for Taft and the Republican ticket.
