with it.

The occurrences at the time of the finding of this new evidence were dramatic. Accompanied by highly George Barr, brother of the murdered man, Captain Baty and Detectives Moloney and Swennes went yesterday to neighborhood of the place where the crime was committed, with the purpose of interviewing the residents, on the off chance of gaining a clew. They had made considerable progress and were debating the advisability of stop-ping at another house, when Captain ty's attention was attracted to a spot on the hard-surfaced road near his feet.

"That's blood!" he said.

The others were inclined to dispute him at first, but young Barr took a pen-knife and began digging up the Atlantic on an English passenger boat, hard-packed roadway.
