

WILSON WILL MAKE GOOD, SAYS MACK

Ex-Chairman of Democratic National Committee Expresses Confidence.

STATE COMMISSION VISITS

New York Delegation Sees Portland for Few Hours and Then Departs for South to Select Fair Building Site.

"It has been nearly three weeks since the people of the United States learned of the overwhelming election of Woodrow Wilson to the Presidency and we have not had a panic," declared Norman E. Mack, of New York, ex-chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at the Multnomah Hotel yesterday. "Neither has any distress been observed in business circles. What is more, there is no the slightest indication that the business conditions will experience any disturbance in consequence of the tremendous Democratic victory of November 5. Governor Wilson will make a good President. The people have full confidence in him. There is an entire absence of alarm and apprehension throughout the East. The country is too prosperous to pay any attention to the bugaboo that a Democratic National Administration and business depression go hand in hand.

Special Session Commended.
"The general impression in the East is that President-elect Wilson has acted wisely in deciding to convene Congress in special session next Spring for the consideration of tariff legislation. His course is especially commended for the reason that the business interests of the country are entitled to know just as soon as possible to what extent the existing tariff schedules are to be affected by a Democratic Congress."

Referring to the probable organization of Wilson's Cabinet, Mr. Mack said he believed the President-elect would offer the Secretary of State portfolio to Bryan, who he hoped would accept. Mr. Mack was chairman of the National committee of his party in the memorable campaign of Bryan and has been closely associated with the Nebraskan politically since, having been a member of the committee for 16 years.

"Bryan no doubt will be the man of the post of Secretary of State, but there is a division of sentiment among the Democrats of the East," said Mr. Mack. "As to whether he will accept, sincerely hope he accepts the Cabinet position if it is offered him. By doing so he will indicate a desire to co-operate with Wilson and, in addition, to be of great assistance to the President in working out progressive policies for which the Democratic party has been contending for the last 16 years and to which Wilson is committed by the Democratic National platform."

Visit Is Not Political.
Mr. Mack's visit to Portland yesterday was not of a political nature, however. He came as chairman of the New York State Commission to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. He was accompanied by the other members of the Commission, who were traveling in a special car. They were on their way to San Francisco to select a site for a state building and make preliminary arrangements for an exhibit at the big 1915 Exposition.

The members of the Commission included several prominent New York citizens, members of the State Senate or Assembly and ex-Governors of Washington, at the Multnomah. A portion of the afternoon was given to an automobile tour of the city.

Papers Are Praised.
"En route to the coast," explained Mr. Mack, "we stopped for a day at the large business centers and, if we had no other excuse, that one alone would insure passing a day in your city. You have a magnificent city and are to be congratulated for the creditable newspapers published here. Have just perused the Sunday issues and was agreeably surprised at their size and more particularly the news service. Your papers here compare favorably with those of any of the large cities."

"The Commission goes direct to San Francisco to select a site for our state building and for which the Legislature has made an appropriation of $700,000. The membership of the Commission is made up of ten Democrats and five Republicans—no Bull Moose."

In addition to Mr. Mack, who is chairman of the Commission, the party consisted of: John E. Yale, Assemblyman and vice-chairman of the Commission; George H. Cobb, State Senator; Thomas H. Cullen, State Senator; John F. Murtaugh, State Senator; George H. Whitney, State Senator; James A. Foley, State Senator; Arthur A. McLean, treasurer Democratic state central committee; Assemblyman Bussey, John T. Kennedy, State Treasurer; John Dix Coffin and Thomson Douglas, nephews of Governor Dix; James W. Reilly, secretary to Mr. Mack, and the following representatives of the bureau of publicity: Daniel L. Ryan, F. S. McCarthy, William Leary and John Moore.

TURKISH WAR DISCUSSED

Biblical Predictions of Great Conflict Pictured by Luther Warren.

To an audience that overflowed the Bungalow Theater, Luther Warren, of Los Angeles, spoke for over an hour on the significance of the war in the Balkans to the world.

He affirmed that the Bible has given prophetic outlines of the history of the nations of earth to the close of time. He instanced the breaking up of the Roman Empire as foretold in the second chapter of Daniel, and further contended that the last verses of the 11th chapter of Daniel are a prophetic picture of Turkey.

"The alarm of war resounds over the earth; the war dogs are being unleashed, making the thinking men of earth tremble for the future. Worldwide war impends in spite of the Hague peace conferences and the efforts of noble men to bring the nations to an understanding. Daniel tells us that 'this nation shall come to its end and none shall help him.' That time is near at hand. But the end of Turkey heralds a time of trouble such as never was in the history of the world before, according to the 12th chapter of Daniel. And at that time all the wars of earth will be brought to an end by the coming of Christ to take possession of his kingdom."

COLLEGE SEEKS AID

Albany Institution to Wage Endowment Campaign.

$87,000 AMOUNT NEEDED

Of $250,000, Total of $163,000 Now Is Subscribed—Remainder Must Be Obtained by School Before End of Year.

Beginning this morning and continuing throughout the week, friends of Albany College will solicit from Portland citizens subscriptions to an endowment fund of $250,000 that is being raised for the Albany institution. James J. Hill, veteran railroad builder, has pledged $50,000 to such a fund on condition that the friends of the school provide an additional $200,000. Of the latter amount, $113,000 has been subscribed, leaving a balance of $87,000 to be raised.

It is necessary that this amount be subscribed before December 31, if the endowment is obtained, for on that date the bulk of the subscriptions, including that of Mr. Hill, will expire. The committee is hopeful of raising $50,000 of the remaining $87,000 in this city.

H. M. Crooks, president of the Albany College, is in the city and will assist in the canvass for subscriptions. Locally, the work will be in charge of a special committee, of which Fletcher Dean is chairman. The committee will commence its labors this morning. Of the $113,000 that has been subscribed, exclusive of Mr. Hill's subscription, $30,000 was signed by the people of Albany, $40,000 by friends of the school in the East, and $43,000 in individual subscriptions in this state.

Growth Is Noted.
"In the last several years Albany College has made a great advancement in the way of strengthening its course of study. The institution does four years of college work above the academic course," said Mr. Crooks yesterday. "With the increasing demands that are being made of educational institutions, the further success and advancement of this institution depends upon raising the endowment for which we are laboring. Such a productive fund is regarded entirely indispensable to the stable growth and support of any educational institution. The Albany school has reached that stage in its growth and advancement that we must have the proposed endowment fund."
"If the endowment fund is obtained, it will mark the beginning of a new era for the institution. The trustees, assuming that the fund will be provided, have purchased a tract of 48 acres as a new campus. The next task will be the removal of the college to the new site and the erection of new buildings. In making these improvements, however, the endowment fund itself will not be used. With the additional revenue such a fund will yield, the trustees feel they will be able to carry out their plans for new buildings."

New Plans Made.
"Our architects, Doyle, Patterson & Beach, of Portland, have prepared plans for a new set of college buildings of the American colonial type of architecture, somewhat after the University of Virginia. The buildings for that institution were designed by Thomas Jefferson, and are said to be the most distinctly American in their architecture in this country. Those buildings are constructed of red brick, with white trimmings. If we are enabled to carry into execution our plans, we will have a more harmonious group of college buildings than any other educational institution in the state."

Albany College is a denominational school. It was founded by the Presbyterian church in the late '30s. The late H. W. Corbett, of this city, was greatly interested in founding the college, and subscribed liberally to the fund with

READERS SEE HUMAN SIDE

"The American Government" Affords New View of Supreme Court.

President Taft, in less than three years, has appointed five new Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States and has transferred an associate Justice to the position of chief Justice—a record that is equaled only by three Presidents, Washington, Lincoln and Jackson, and excelled only by Washington.

Washington, of course, undertook the primary organization of the court, and that in a day when the Federal Government was of such little moment that men resigned from the Supreme Court to go to the legislatures of a state. In his eight years, Washington appointed 12 members of the highest court, including Chief Justices Jay, Rutledge and Ellsworth. Jackson, in eight years, named five, including Chief Justice Taney, while Lincoln, in four years, named five, including Chief Justice Chase.

Mr. Taft has promoted Chief Justice White and has added Justices Lurion Hughes, Van Devanter, Lamar and Pitney to the bench. Oddly enough, the purely human characteristics of this highest court in the world are seldom brought before the people. For this reason the chapter on the Supreme Court in "The American Government," by Frederic J. Haskin, is of especial value. Its accuracy is vouched for by the clerk of the court and its text tells of the justices as human beings—even such human beings as sometimes borrow a chew of tobacco. This is only one of the many things of a similar character that mark this unique book. For particulars concerning its distribution buy The Oregonian, see coupon on page 2.

HOOD RIVER ORCHARDIST IS LAID TO REST.

Thomas Bishop.

HOOD RIVER, Or., Nov. 24.—(Special.)—Thomas Bishop, an orchardist who died at his home on the Tucker road Wednesday afternoon, was buried today. Mr. Bishop leaves a widow, two sons, Thomas Bishop, Jr., and Lloyd Earl Bishop, of Alberta, Canada, and three daughters, Mrs. Sarah Simpson, Mrs. E. D. Miller and Miss Laura Bishop, all of Portland.

Tracklaying to Resume.

VALE, Or., Nov. 24.—(Special.)—Welcome railroad news from the Oregon-Easter comes in the report that tracklaying on this road will be resumed later than December 1. When milepost 27 was reached about a month ago, work was stopped in order to shift the crew elsewhere. The shortage of locomotive power makes it hard for the railroad company to attend to all points, according to Carl Stradley, chief engineer for the Oregon Short Line, who was in Vale last week.

BY JOSEPH M. QUENTIN.
Ten performances of grand opera, with receipts amounting to more than $19,000, brought the Lambardi engagement to a close, with everybody pleased—so much so that at the conclusion of the matinee performance of "Carmen" the Hellog yesterday there were cries from the large audience: "Come again. You have made good. Goodbye."

Such is the meritorious record of the Lambardi Pacific Coast Grand Opera Company after a week's visit in this city. It is not necessary at this time to write a formal review of the renditions of high-class grand opera that have been given, as each opera rendition has been reviewed in detail. The company, both soloists and chorus, is a good one, better than last year's, while the large orchestra, comprising nearly 40 musicians, was a genuine musical treat and it was splendidly led.

"Carmen" was adequately sung and played. It is not the custom of the Lambardis to play their weakest opera just as they are about to leave town and put on their weakest cast. The performance was well-staged, the soloists were real principals and not understudies, and the rendition of the music was as carefully and artistically done as if the company had just arrived in town.

"Carmen" is Portland's favorite. Portland knows and likes Bizet's opera, "Carmen," an exotic flower from sunny Spain, with its principal figures a born coquette with a dash of trouble, a little red blood in her veins; a haughty toreador or professional bull-fighter, and a hot-tempered Sergeant of dragons awarded from his oath of allegiance as a soldier in the army of the King of Spain by the wiles of the aforesaid coquette and heart-breaker, Carmen, saucy, hot-tempered and possessed of many lovers, was portrayed by Tarquini, who played and sang the part with the necessary passion and abandon. She easily dominated the stage.

In artistry and fierce intensity, her portrayal of Carmen was second in this city only to Bertossi's, a soprano who, by the way, has been re-engaged by the Lambardi management. Giovochini, baritone, repeated his former successes as the toreador. He comes first on the stage in the second act, and his "Toreador" song was encored so warmly that it had to be repeated, in spite of the fact that he has only recently recovered from the effects of a cold. Agostini, tenor, made an impressive, dignified Don Jose, and sang so well that he was clearly a vocal favorite. Sophie Charlebois made a pretty, dainty Micaela, and sang with charm.

Curtain Speeches a Feature.

One of the pleasant extra features of the Lambardi engagement was the regular amusing before-the-curtain speech, every night, by Fortune Gallo, manager of the company. Mr. Gallo is a born humorist of a quiet order. It is also worth mentioning that the stage manager and treasurer of the company is Riccardo Petrowitch, who was once a solo tenor with Patti. "I sang with Patti in the year 1888 and was with her for three years," said Mr. Petrowitch. "I was a dramatic tenor. Now I sing no more. I attend to the dollars-and-cents end of the game."

The Octopus packed its Grip

Do you remember the old Louisiana lottery? That fat octopus had its greedy tentacles in almost every hamlet and was fair gorged with the pennies of the poor.

It seemed impossible to oust it, and yet when the people finally woke up to what it really was, it vanished like a puff of smoke.

As long as it was regarded as a gamble, people said, "There's no use trying to stop it. Folks will gamble." But when the country woke up to the fact that the Louisiana lottery was a "sure thing," collecting hundreds of millions and paying back comparatively nothing—just a huge vampire steadily battering on honest business—the moment that view became clear in the public conscience, it was all over. One simple Federal law was passed and the invincible octopus packed its grip and hit the trail.
