Italian Marbles

—Many of these are familiar to all in their gleaming whiteness, while others we are showing are new and present the wonderful cloudy tints so peculiar to rare marbles, old rose, mauve, ashes of roses and dull amber. One very handsome piece entitled "History" is of a woman in a delicate rose colored robe; she is seated upon a settee of very beautiful marble, making the figure about 24 inches high. This is priced at $165

—Other pieces are marked as follows:

Jeanne D'Arc	$25
Laughing Boy	$27
Venus De Milo	$13.50-$20
The Greek Slave	$13.50-$20
Three Dancing Girls	$22
The Thorn Puller	$15-$23
Cupid and Psyche	$12
Cupid and Psyche	$27
Ambition	$90
Rest (an exquisite piece)	$170

—The prices range all the way between these quoted.

The Luxury of Wide Aisles

—Looking out from the secure and comfortable mezzanine floor, we surveyed the throngs of holiday shoppers, some bustling about in great haste, others loitering over the counters or strolling leisurely from one section to another.

—"How happy everyone is!" bubbled the girl in the blue suit, as she leaned over the railing to get a better view. "It doesn't seem like the 'strenuous season' at all. Yet the joy—and the excitement—are here."

—"Perhaps it's the holly color scheme," I remarked, as I took note of the cheery garlands of red and green which transformed the stately pillars, and seemed to make the place glow with warm light and welcome.

—The girl in blue smiled her appreciation.

—"It is beautiful," she replied, "but I think there is another reason. It's the glorious spaciousness of the place. You can wander at will here, even at this season, and not be jostled or pushed. The aisles are so broad that there is room for everybody."

—I glanced over the constantly moving crowd—at the wide spaces between the counters, and noted the air of freedom and ease which prevailed. I remembered scenes of disorder and hopeless confusion that had characterized my Christmas shopping expeditions in other places—and shuddered.

—There is room enough in these broad aisles to install dozens of sales tables—the familiar long, narrow kind with their potpourri of odds and ends and flaunting bargain signs. But it is not the intention of the Lipman, Wolfe & Co. store to do this. Even though there be hosts of bargains crying out to be displayed, and though the business arguments in favor of added sales at this season, this store will hold to its custom of giving every consideration to its patrons—including the luxury of broad, spacious aisles. Success here is not measured entirely by the volume of sales. There still remains the ideals, courtesies and ethics of business that mean much to this store.
