STOREKEEPERS HELD UP

UNMASKED ROBBER DOES BUSINESS DOWN TOWN. Yamhill-Street Grocery Entered at 6:50 P. M., Cash Register and Safe Looted in Front of Owner.

Within a stone's throw of the Portland Hotel, two partners in the McElroy grocery store, at 355 Yamhill street, were held up last night at 6:50 o'clock. The store, by an unmasked man of whom the police have a good description, and relieved of about $50, a gold watch and a ring. The store is conducted by J. H. and J. L. McElroy and John Frederickson. J. H. McElroy and Mr. Frederickson were in the room when the robber entered.

Some ornamental paper ribbons across the windows, and on the left side as one enters, hidden near the window, is a small table. At this Mr. McElroy was seated reading. Mr. Frederickson was in the center of the store, which is a large room with a red checkered floor. The robber, who looked as though it had been crumpled up purposely, and was drawn well down over ears and eyes. His hair and his overcoat were also of a similar hue. He wore new rubbers over black lace shoes. His face was almost white, with a few days' growth of red whiskers on his chin. He was about 5 feet 7 inches in height, weighed 145 pounds and was about 25 years old.

Covering his victims with a revolver, he emptied the cash register of its contents, getting approximately $50, then ordered one of the partners to open the safe. There was only a watch and ring held as security for groceries in the strong box. Next the men were ordered to turn their pockets inside out, but they were without funds.

The intruder left by the front door and his way up Park street. The police have an excellent description of both articles, in case they are pawned, and within a short time Detective Schaefer and Abbott were assigned to the case.

In some particulars the man resembles a "hobnob" man who is suspected of being in town, and if this is so, his capture should be only a question of time.

Poor, Blind Colored Man Has Hard Time

Al Lawson Pays Dearly for Wrongdoing, and Wistful Blasts Find Him in Pitiable Plight.

HE is only a ragged blind colored man. He says his name is Al Lawson. You will find him sitting on a camp stool at one of the corners of Third and Stark street every day. It is cold these winter days and he is not warmly dressed. He has a few pencils and these he tries to sell to passers-by. Few people notice him. Today he tried to cross the street, but got mixed in the hurrying crowd and could not find his way. A man seeing his plight took him by the arm and assisted him across. As he left it was noticed that the cup the blind man bore had a little silver in it. Most people are kind, but thoughtless. Al Lawson told his story. He didn't complain, but told it simply. Seven years ago he was sent to the prison at Salem. He did not say for what offense; probably it was a grievous sin. "For grievously he has paid for it." At the time he was committed to prison there was an iron foundry there where he labored at this work, then his eyes began to fail.

A blind man is not of much use in a foundry so he was pardoned. He came to Portland, and consulted a doctor. The doctor told him that the heat had destroyed his sight and that he would never see again. There is no liability law that applies against the state, so Al Lawson is trying to sell pencils. He does not sell many and cannot dress comfortably, but he is only a poor blind colored man!
