More than 250 colonists are arriving in Fortland every day now and if the movement continues at this rate antil the close of the season about 7560 settlers will be added to Oregon's population as a result of the low fares now in effect on all transcontinental railroads.

But it is not reasonable to expect that the present movement will continue. It has been observed in previous years that the volume of travel reaches its height near the beginning of the period and that it again assumes maximum proportions hear the close.

Portland now is enjoying the benefit of the leavy movement that set out when the reduced rate tickets first went on sale, a week ago last Saturiay.
