FLOAT CALLS MANY

Diver's Outfit Big Attraction to Curious Persons.

STAGGER DESCRIBES WORK

Compressed Air Said to Be Good for Lung Troubles, Containing 5 Per Cent More Oxygen Than Air We Breathe.

Charles F. Stagger, who has just finished removing 1800 tons of rock from the submerged portion of the middle pier of the old steel bridge, found his diving float a mecca for visitors yesterday afternoon, where it lay near the steamer Bear.

An odd clothesline attracted visitors to the dock near his float. Never had many of them seen such peculiar looking things. Canvas and rubber suits, various leather moccasins and overshoes, rubber mittens and such things hung up to dry. A belt weighing over 100 pounds on the deck and copper and lead shoes with leather uppers weighing many pounds were equally peculiar. A pump, hose, insulated wire and submarine telephone also were drying, for all, except the pump, spend much of the time under water.

Diver Must Be Physically Able.

"A man must be physically able to perform such work," said Mr. Stagger. "A diver has to work where the pressure is great and the water is cold. It has been about 28 degrees where I have been working 110 feet under the surface. Formerly we had to put up without light and talk by signals. Now we have telephones and electric lights.

"But even with these forms of convenience and safety many insurance companies will not insure divers. I pay 18 cents a day for $3000 insurance. When I go down and the tender can't haul me up, I close the air escape and float up. I can bring 1000 pounds to the surface by the same means. That is why we have to weight ourselves to stay down. The weight must be distributed so that our feet and not our heads will stay down.

Compressed Air Cures Asthma.

"The compressed air is good for a man. It often cures lung troubles and asthma and other similar diseases. There is about 5 per cent more oxygen in compressed air than the air we breathe in the open.

"As I use 220 pounds to keep me down 110 feet, I don't thing that women will ever enter the profession. I was a sailor when a boy in Germany, and rose to be a master of sailing ships. Then I became a diver 20 years ago, and my first experience has made me want to change from one place to another.

"The outfit costs about $1300, and we have to hire a barge and tender. The wear and tear is about $1.50 daily and our average pay is $35 for five hours' work. Greater depths command higher prices. I once went down 180 feet and remained 12 minutes, but the pressure of 65 pounds per inch was too hard on me.

"We use four coverings on our feet over our socks—moccasins, the suit feet themselves, chafing boots and the heavy copper boots. Our hands are bare except in very cold water, when we use rubber mittens, which are hard to work in.

MARINER TO PUBLISH POEMS

Captain MacGenn Arrives on Breakwater With New Verses.

The steamer Breakwater arrived at 2:25 P. M. with Captain MacGenn in the best of spirits, for he is about to publish his poems in book form, and as a poet will occupy the high place of esteem which Captain A. W. Nelson, ex-master of the Beaver and now on the Korea, held as an author in the minds of Portland citizens.

The Breakwater had 95 passengers and 40 tons of freight. Among the passengers was W. F. Miller, superintendent of the line, who brought his family to Portland from Marshfield on a visit. May 5 is the date when the vessel will start on its five-day schedule.

Among Captain MacGenn's latest poems are "Love," "Crossing the Bar" and "Sunset." These he composed following his trip to New York in January. Besides he has added to his verses on Mark Antony, and is composing a poem entitled "Friendship."

While in the East Captain MacGenn visited Colonel Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill, and the ex-President gave him the following autograph letter of introduction to the editor of the Outlook:

"Sagamore Hill, Jan. 17, 1913.—Captain MacGenn, of Oregon, is a fine fellow, an ardent progressive. He wishes certain information which you, perhaps, can give him. I commend him to your courtesy. Sincerely yours,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Colonel Roosevelt commented, in a flattering manner, Captain MacGenn's poem "Virtue," which he admired both for its quality and the subject the captain had chosen to write about. The poem was published in The Oregonian in 1910.

Captain MacGenn will go to Scotland in 1915, and while there will arrange for the copyrighting of his new book of poems in the British Isles.

NEW DOCK WILL BE BUILT

Coming of Hamburg-American to Hurry O.-W. R. & N. Project.

In refusing to exchange land with the city so a fireboat station could be erected south of Ainsworth dock, O.-W. R. & N. officials are said to contemplate the erection of a new dock where the lower Alaska dock formerly stood, and that work would be started in the near future if a deal is consummated with the Hamburg-American line, whereby the latter will use the property for its Portland-Oriental-European service.

Negotiations have been on for several weeks between the two and at first the Hamburg-American will use Ainsworth dock, but as the trade is expected to grow and there will be a volume of business exchanged between the rail and water lines, the steamship interests could utilize considerable more space than will be available on Ainsworth. The latter is also used as berths for steamers of the "Big Three" fleet, as well as a warehouse for the cargo they handle.

Rosecrans Victim Sent South.

ASTORIA, Or., April 20.—(Special.)—The body of Fred Wilson, chief steward on the ill-fated tank steamer Rosecrans, who lost his life when that vessel was wrecked on Peacock spit, was sent on the steamer Geo. W. Elder today to San Francisco for interment.

Newberg Corner Ill-Fated.

NEWBERG, Or., April 20.—(Special.)—It is an odd circumstance that the Gregory building, corner First and Blaine, in which the fire of yesterday occurred, occupies a site, one of the most valuable business corners in Newberg, on which two other buildings were burned within a few years. The outside of the building had the appearance of being a brick wall, but it was of metal pointed off to look like brick. That the flames were confined to this structure reflects credit on the volunteer fire department, aroused at 5 o'clock in the morning.

Ferrell Stays in Jail.

SPRINGFIELD, Or., April 20.—(Special.)—Hugh D. Smith, alias Jack Ferrell, who was arrested at Moro, Or., a few days ago and brought back here yesterday by Sheriff Parker, was bound over by Judge Mullen on the charge of contributing to the delinquency of Marie Yaeger, a 12-year-old girl of this place. He was placed under a bond of $1500, which has not yet been given, and he is in the County Jail in Eugene.
