STEEL AGAIN IS DELAYED

EFFECT OF FLOODS STILL FELT IN PORTLAND. Crippled Traffic Facilities Hold Up Work on Northwestern National Bank Building.

Steel for the new Northwestern National Bank building, being erected on Morrison street, between Broadway and Sixth street, again has been delayed in transit by the recent flood in the Middle West and the first shipments may not arrive here until the latter part of May.

Vice-president Gillette, of the Minneapolis Steel & Machinery Company, which has the contract for fabricating the steel arrived in Portland yesterday in an endeavor to hasten the shipments. He told officers of the Northwestern National Bank that he is putting up the building, that 14 cars of steel were loaded at Indianapolis before the flood and that the damage done to the railroads and rolling stock in the disaster has prevented its movement.

The Hoibrau has adapted the East-west innovation of holding afternoon concerts for the benefit of women shoppers. This has proven quite popular in the East, and with the engagement of the "Saxons," the Hoibrau has secured an attraction of interest to music lovers. They render classical and popular selections on a variety of instruments. They are assisted by Miss Viola Barret, lyric soprano. During the concert hours the management features light refreshments—tea, ices and pastry.

Contracts have been made for the terra cotta work, the ornamental iron, the wiring, piping and interior fixtures, so that as soon as the steel begins to take form with it.

The elaborate fixtures for the Northwestern National Bank and the Portland Trust Company, which will occupy the rooms at Sixth and Morrison streets, already have been made and are in storage, and will be installed soon. It is the intention of the bank directors to proceed with the banking rooms as rapidly as physical conditions in the street and surrounding construction of the 15-story building will permit. They contemplate having the bank and vault ready for use even before some of the exterior work of the other part of the building is ready for installation.
