

PROMINENT IDAHO FARMER IS KILLED

Mystery Surrounds Untimely Death of George Deering at Grangeville.

WHILE HERDING END COMES

Neck of Animal and Saddle Blood-Covered and Body of Dead Man Is Found Half Mile From Home-Theories at Variance.

LEWISTON, Idaho, June 20.—(Special.)—While riding on his cattle on his farm near Grangeville, George Deering, a well-known Idaho County farmer, was shot and killed today, and the officers of that county are of the opinion that it was a premeditated murder.

Mr. Deering left his ranch home on Monday to round up some of his stock, and was later to be accompanied by his wife, who was to assist him. Instead of going herself to assist Mr. Deering, she sent her oldest son, Young Deering, had gone only a short distance from home when he found the horse his father was riding. The neck of the animal and the saddle were covered with blood.

After a brief search the dead man was found about a half mile from his home. Investigation of the nature of the wound revealed that he had been shot from some distance. The bullet entered his neck just above the shoulder. It appears that Mr. Deering must have died instantly after falling from his horse.

Officers and neighbors are unable to furnish any clue to the shooting. Mr. Deering had been a resident of Idaho County for many years, had extensive stock holdings, but never figured in any matters of the range which would cause an assault. The officers entertain some idea that Mr. Deering might have been killed by a stray bullet, but no grounds have been found upon which to base this theory. Sheriff Elmers, of Idaho County, informed the entire locality about the Deering home to ascertain whether anyone had been in the vicinity and had at that time engaged in any shooting. That Mr. Deering was unarmed on his trip this morning was sure by statements of his wife and the officers who found him upon their arrival. This dispels the idea of accidental shooting or self-destruction.

Preparations for the expedition had been under way many months before the party left Fairbanks. In September, 1912, Karstens took a launch load of supplies up the Kantishna River from where they were hauled by dog-team to the base camp near McChes Pass at an altitude of 9000 feet. The equipment was of the best, including scientific instruments, such as a mercurial barometer, the first ever taken into Alaska; two aneroid barometers, wood and alcohol stoves, and a selected supply of provisions. On the way to the base camp the party bagged four caribou, enough to insure fresh meat for the men and food for the five dogs that were kept at the base camp.

CIVIL WAR FIGHT RECALLED

University of Oregon Man Veteran of Battle of Gettysburg.

EUGENE, Or., June 20.—(Special.)—"I tried to climb that hill 50 years ago, but couldn't," said B. J. Hawthorne, who was with Pickett's men at Gettysburg, and who will this year attend the reunion on the battlefield. "I think I'll be able to do it this time. Fifty years ago I had a pretty hard time of it. I got as far as a stone wall, but there were some pretty mad fellows the other side of it, and they kept poking around with their bayonets and when one stuck me through the arm I decided I would go back."

Thus the professor emeritus of psychology of the University of Oregon describes in his quaint way his part in the great battle that in so large a measure determined the outcome of the Civil War.
