

YOUNG ROBBER HAS DUAL PERSONALITY

Bank-Looting Desperado Winsome and Socially Prominent at Glendale.

TO BE DARING IS AMBITION

Notoriety of Harry Tracy and John Turnow Fascinate Ray Diamond and Methods of Those Outlaws Adopted by Him.

ROSEBURG, Or., June 22.—(Special.)

That Ray Diamond, the youthful desperado who on last Monday held up Cashier Smith of the Glendale State Bank and secured something over $200 in money, was a dual personality, is the general belief of local officers and detectives, who for the past week have been making effort to capture him.

On last Monday Diamond, who had lived in Glendale five years, had conducted himself in a manner which won for him the esteem of his acquaintances. He was industrious and worked steadily until about two months ago, when he lost his position following a minor altercation with a fellow employee.

Was Socially Prominent.
A survey of his past life reveals that Diamond was welcomed in the best social circles in this district. Only a few weeks ago he played the leading part in a home talent play, for which he received high commendation. He was an Oddfellow, while the cashier he held up was the Noble Grand of his lodge.

Young Diamond seldom, if ever, entered a saloon, and prior to committing the daring robbery, it is said no one at Glendale ever saw him take a drink of liquor. In his every-day life he was quiet and unassuming and talked little. He loved literature and was familiar with the works of the most noted authors. He was well versed on current events, and was a conversationalist of more than ordinary intelligence. In all, Diamond's outward life suggested nothing that would indicate that he was desperate and would ransack a bank. On the contrary, his features would indicate refinement, while his manner was such as to win him friends on every hand.

Outlaw Studied by Youth.
There was another side to Diamond's life, however, which was only known to himself. While a reader of heavy literature, Diamond also read much of the notorious characters, including John Turnow, the Washington desperado, and Harry Tracy, the Oregon outlaw. It is believed he learned of the features of these men, and fascinated by the possibility of himself gaining notoriety for daring, he decided to enter the world of crime.

In the sleeping room of his lonely cabin on the outskirts of Glendale were found hundreds of papers and books, the pages of which were filled with thrilling scenes enacted by desperate outlaws.
Indications are that when finally the time came for his adventure, he laid his plans carefully. Possessed of that cunning displayed by much older and experienced men of crime, Diamond first prepared for the escape. He probably recalled the expression of Tracy, "That any fool could rob a bank, but there were few who could get away."

Purchasing supplies, Diamond traveled to a point somewhere in the dense timber about a few miles from Glendale, awaiting the opportune moment when he should enter the bank in true desperado style and emerge with the wealth for which he longed.

Deed Planned Amid Society.
That Diamond was planning a hold-up and robbery at the very time he participated in home talent plays, and mingled with Glendale's best society, the officers say there can be no doubt.

Even the bank officials speak in high terms of Diamond's past life, and are unable to give any explanation of his own money and consequently was not driven to desperation through lack of funds.
Cashier Smith, the victim of the hold-up, says he knew Diamond well, and would have been no more surprised had any of Glendale's merchants committed the act.

That Diamond made himself conspicuous at the Beacon and Looney mines, on Whiskey Creek, for the purpose of felling the officers is the latest theory entertained by those conducting the man hunt.

Detective Goes to Grants Pass.
Detective Staton, of Portland, who has been here in the interests of the company in which the bank was insured against robbery, believes that Diamond changed his course following the Looney mines Wednesday and retraced his steps to the head of Mule Creek, where he took the trail leading down Rogue River.

In the event Staton's theory is correct, Diamond may emerge from the mountain districts in the vicinity of Grants Pass or may continue his way down the coast to Crescent City, where he could later be caught by boat. Staton tonight went to the meeting. From there he said he would strike out over the trail in hope of blocking any attempt that Diamond might make to reach Crescent City.
Local officers today received a message from Grants Pass to the effect that a man answering Diamond's description attempted to board a theatrical special train at that place early Friday morning. The informant said the fellow carried a gun and had a pack of blankets.

According to the report brought here the Curacao had just left the Fish Egg cannery, bound for the Swift cannery at Warm Chuck, when she struck rock. She was running at full speed on the usual course taken by steamers between Seattle and Ketchikan.
It was soon found that the pumps could not make headway against the rush of water, and Captain Thompson immediately headed the vessel for the beach at Swift's cannery. He managed to bring his vessel up on shore just before the water reached the deckline. Boats had been put out over the side, and the last passenger was lifted just as the Curacao settled to the bottom.

It was high tide at the time and only a part of the Curacao's stack is visible. The cargo will be an entire loss.

Justice Who Certified Return as Notary Explains.

GOLDENDALE, Wash., June 22.—(Special.)—William Olsen, a farmer residing near Humen, Washington, married a couple June 8, and certified the return as a notary public, explains his action by saying that he was elected Justice of the Peace for Humen in this county in Fall, but did not file a bond and qualify for the office as required by law. He says that the Humen community is around the community so long that he did not stop to look into the matter, but thought that the fact that he was elected Justice of the Peace gave him authority to marry the couple and he used his authority as a notary public in lieu of his defective qualifications as Justice of the Peace in certifying the return.

FARMERS OPPOSE TOWN

INCORPORATION OF WOODBURN IS BEING FOUGHT.

Report Says Agitation Was Started by Man Who Wishes to Open Saloon in New Town.

SALEM, Or., June 22.—(Special.)—Circuit Judge Galloway has granted a temporary restraining order preventing the holding of an election in West Woodburn tomorrow for the purpose of incorporating the town. The court held that the procedure for incorporation was started under an old law which was repealed by a law passed at the last session of the Legislature.
A score of farmers whose land would be in the limits of the proposed town oppose incorporation on the ground that they do not want to pay city taxes on land used for agricultural purposes. It is reported that the agitation for the incorporation of the community was started by a man who wishes to open a saloon there, a new law prohibiting them in towns not incorporated. It is charged that a number of the signatures to a petition for incorporation were obtained by fraud, the law being that it must contain 150 names of residents, and that there are not that many in West Woodburn.
It is alleged that, in order to obtain a sufficient number, members of a section crew temporarily working in the town, were induced to sign.
The farmers are represented by S. T. Richardson and C. M. Inman.

INSTANT POSTUM

This pure food-drink, sold by grocers everywhere, is warranted pure and absolutely free from the coffee drug, caffeine. It feeds and nourishes where coffee destroys the tissues.

Instant Postum is made of prime wheat and the juice of sugar-cane, roasted and blended to produce a flavour much resembling high-grade Java.

A level teaspoonful of Instant Postum in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly, and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.
