

SULZER CALLS ON MURPHY FOR PROOF

Governor Demands That Tammany Boss Act—Not "Irresponsible Tool."

ANSWER IS PROMISED

"Hands Off" on Legislature Until Direct Primary Bill is Acted On, Is Executive's Plea—Curtis Is Assailed.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 23.—Governor Sulzer added another chapter today to the Sulzer-Murphy-Curtis controversy by publishing statements in a reply to those given out yesterday by Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, and George M. Curtis, of New York.

"I want Mr. Murphy and his co-conspirators to produce as quickly as they can all the other libelous stuff they say they have on me and with which they have bombarded me, because I refused to do what they wanted. I want Murphy to do this—not some irresponsible tool I will answer.

"Curtis is a notorious sealer. He is now the tool of the politician-conspirators who are trying to ruin me because I refuse to do their bidding and respond to their demands. I shall give Curtis no more notoriety and will decline in the future to gratify his vanity for publicity by denying his libelous charges."

KIDNAPING CASE BEGINS Man on Trial at Klamath Falls for Trip With 14-Year-Old Girl.

KLAMATH FALLS, Or., June 23.—(Special.)—On a charge of kidnaping Harriet Pink, aged 14, a man named Ferris is being tried here. The girl involved in the case was the first witness for the state. She gave such the same testimony as did Ferris when he was returned last summer from California, where he had taken the girl.

BABY SEA LION CAPTURED Dan J. Moore, of Seaside, Promises to Train Pet.

SEASIDE, Or., June 23.—(Special.)—Dan J. Moore, proprietor of the Hotel Moore, who has been feeding the public for many years has gone in for animal training. Dan has a baby sea lion and he has christened her Spotted Queen. Spotted Queen got into the crab hole, a depression in the ocean bed only visible when the tide is at its low June ebb, and was taken by a clam digger and presented to Mr. Moore.

President Tells of Need to Reform Currency and Congress Prepares to Act.

EARLY LEGISLATION URGED

Representative Mann Says Message is "Example of Classical English, but Nothing More"—Opposition by Minority Presaged.

message was a fine "example of classical English, but there is nothing more to it, unless it be considered as a threat that patronage would be withheld until a banking and currency bill was passed."

Bill Held to Be Partisan. "It is evident that the measure is to be considered a Democratic partisan bill, but even so if it will advance the interest of the country, the Republicans will support it, but if it threatens to go still further than the tariff bill in breaking down the prosperity of the country, they will not support it. The one thing that we will not stand for is partisan political control of banks or the issuance of currency."

House Caucus Called. Although a House caucus has been called for this week, it is probable that it will not take any definite action on the currency bill.

Readjustment in Store. "We are about to set them free; we must not leave them without the tools of action when they are free. We are about to set them free by removing the tramlines of the protective tariff. Ever since the Civil War they have waited for this emancipation and for the free opportunities it will bring with it. It has been reserved for us to give it to them. Some fell in love, instead, with the slothful security of their dependence upon the Government; some took advantage of the shelter of the nursery to set up a family dynasty of their own within its walls. Now both the tonic and the discipline of liberty and maturity are to come. There will be some readjustments of purpose and point of view. There will follow a period of expansion and new enterprise, freshly conceived for us to determine now whether it shall be rapid and facile and of easy accomplishment. This it cannot be unless the resourceful business man who acts to deal with the new circumstances are to have at hand and ready for use the instruments and conveniences of free enterprise, which independent men need when acting on their own initiative.

Proper Credit is Needed. "It is not enough to strike the shackles from business. The duty of statesmanship is not negative merely. It is constructive also. We must show that we understand what business needs and how to supply it. No man, however casual and superficial his observation of the conditions now prevailing in the country, can fail to see that one of the chief things business needs now and will need increasingly as it gains in scope and vigor in the years immediately ahead of us, is the proper means by which readily to vitalize its credit, corporate and individual, and its original brains. What will it profit us to be free if we are not to have the best and most accessible instrumentalities of commerce and enterprise? What will it profit us to be free if we are to have a monopoly if we are to remain in the grip of another and more effective monopoly? How are we to gain and keep the confidence of the business community unless we show that we know both to aid and to protect it? What shall we do to make the tariff enterprise necessary and also make it very difficult by leaving all else except the tariff intact as we found it? The tyrannies of business by and large, lie within the field of credit. We know that. Shall we not act upon the knowledge? Do we not have the means to act upon it? If a man cannot make his assets available at pleasure, his resource, what shall we do to him to see opportunity beckoning to him on every hand, when others have the keys of credit in their pockets and treat them as all but their own private possessions? It is perfectly clear that it is our duty to supply the new banking and currency system to the country, and that it will immediately need it more than ever.

Early Action Urged. "The only question is, When shall we supply it?—now or later?—and the demands shall have become repressed that we were so dull and so slow? Shall we hasten to change the tariff laws and then be lagged about in trying it possible and easy for the tariff to take advantage of the change? Shall we have an answer to that question which can be only given by our sacrifice to ourselves. It is a question of the circumstances forbid us to postpone. I should be loath to my deepest convictions of public obligation did I not press it upon you with solemn insistence.

Principles upon which we should act are also clear. The country has sought and seen its path in this matter within the last few years. It is now clearly now than it ever saw it before—much more clearly than when the last legislative proposals on the subject were made. We must have a currency, not rigid as now, but readily, elastically responsive to sound credit, the expanding and contracting credits of every-day transactions, the normal ebb and flow of personal and corporate dealing. Our banking laws must move with the times, must not permit concentration anywhere in a few hands of the monetary resources of the country or their use for speculative purposes in such volume as to hinder or impede or stand in the way of other more legitimate and more fruitful uses, and the control of the system of banking which our new laws are to set up must be public, not private; must be vested in the Government itself, so that the banks may be the instruments, not the masters, of business and of individual enterprise and initiative.

Committees Ready to Report. "The committees of the Congress, to whose legislation of this character is referred, have devoted careful and dispassionate study to the means of accomplishing these objects. They have honored me by consulting me. They are ready to suggest action. I have come to you, as the head of the Government and the responsible leader of the party in power, to urge action now, while there is time to serve the country deliberately and as we should in a clear light of common counsel. I appeal to you with a deep conviction of duty. I believe that you share this conviction. I therefore appeal to you with confidence. I am at your service without reserve to play my part in any way you may call upon me to play in this great enterprise of eminent reform, which it will dignify and distinguish us to perform and discredit us to neglect."

FAIRBANKS URGES HARMONY IN PARTY

Forget and Forgive is Message to Republicans of Nebraska.

BOTH WINGS REPRESENTED

Ex-Vice-President Says "Let Bygones Be Bygones"—Lower Exemption on Income Tax Favored—Minimum Too High.

OMAHA, Neb., June 23.—Forget and forgive was the keynote of an address delivered tonight by ex-Vice-President Charles W. Fairbanks at a banquet tendered him by 300 Republican leaders of Nebraska. The gathering was fairly representative of both wings of the party in this state.

"Get Together" Policy Urged. To Nebraska Republicans the former Vice-President recommended a "get-together" policy and that they let bygones be bygones. "No proscription spirit should be kept alive," he declared. "No matter how differently good Republicans saw their duty a year ago—that doesn't matter now. Such bitterly Republicanism today is one's loyalty to Republican principles now."

Mr. Fairbanks professed his address with a declaration that when he accepted an invitation to address the annual mission school, now in session in this city, he did not presume he would also be called upon to make a political address. He then reviewed the achievements of the party at some length, dealing the result of Republican legislation mentioning particularly the Interstate Commerce law and the Sherman anti-trust law. These two laws, he declared, had served to protect the people against railroads and industrial monopoly as has no other legislation ever enacted.

Heal of Breach Predicted. Speaking of the future he said: "Now and then you have heard it said that the Republican party has ended its career; that it is a party of the present rather than of the future. The party is prospering, we have heard it proclaimed in other days. "Circumstances which unfortunately led to party division a year ago no longer obtain. The country is in full power and it can be overthrown only by the united effort of the great majority who believe in the soundness and efficacy of Republican principles. Republicans, that is to say, those who believe the political doctrine of the Republican party, are largely in the majority throughout the country. I have no doubt whatever that the logic of events will bring them into co-operation again, and that the result cannot be accomplished by coercion of any sort; it must come about naturally, by the exercise of a spirit of tolerance and patience; and scores should be forgotten; as President McKinley happily puts it—"It does not do to keep books in politics."

Distribution Favored. The speaker then came to the question of the tariff and spoke of the equalizing of the burden of taxation. He referred particularly to the income tax, which he declared should be so fixed as to distribute its result in a manner which would not be discriminatory against a particular few. The exercise of better citizenship and common justice demand that the minimum be placed at a figure which will give it the proper distribution, he declared.

The tariff should be revised with discriminating judgment," he continued. "In light of the best possible facts should be ascertained by a board of experts, so as to safeguard American production without imposing any undue burdens upon the people."

Mr. Fairbanks declared that the Republican party should stand firm for the integrity of the courts in the exercise of their judicial functions. "We do not believe," he said, "that the ends of justice will be subserved by undermining our judicial system, directly or indirectly."
