made by Huerta Cabinet officials it is clear that Mr. Lind will not be received with open arms. They even suggest that he may be deported as an objectionable foreigner. This sugges-tion is based on the report that Mr. Lind would seek to bring pressure to voluntary retirement. Senor Adaple, Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs, views such a programme by America as being of a seditious character, and since the American representative has no credentials of an official nature, that Mexican pride has been sorely touched.

If the Wilson Administration were deliberately setting out to force intervention in Mexico, it would seem that municipal forest. the movement could not be made more expeditiously. Before sending Mr. Lind abroad with offers of mediation and peaceful intervention, it might have been well for the State Department to ascertain the probable reception he would meet. It yould seem almost too much to expect of human nature that we ask Huerta to receive Mr. Lind if he is instructed same treatment. to ask Huerta to get out. There is, in a way, a similarity between the methods of the peace-promoting State Department and those of Senor Carranza, seeking to displace Huerta by less subtle though possibly more reasonable means.

Bluster is something of a Mexican characteristic, and it may be that Huerta and his advisers will cool off
