Gone was the spirit of the men from the North, broken their confidence, and they showed it at every stage of the they showed it at every stage of the proceedings. Hits were counted that never should have been made and the fielding, while not particularly off color, was of an indifferent quality. In desperation, McCredie once again shifted his lineup. Lindsay was back in the game, but on account of his foot, he was sent in to bat next to the pitcher. Kores and Flaher found themselves moved up in the batting order, but the changes accomplished order, but the changes accomplished nothing, and the Beavers found them-selves absolutely blanked at the windup.
