Addison Bennett Makes His Last Appeals to Citizens to Visit Greatest of Oregon Shows-Management Is Praised.

BY ADDISON BENNETT.
SALEM, Or., Oct. 5.—(Special.)—The beginning of the fifth day of Oregon's greatest State Fair was cloudy; the wind in the southwest; a moisture in the air—every indication foreboding rain. All the forenoon it seemed that we were near the end of the pleasant Autumn weather—and at five minutes after the noon hour there came a few sprinkles of rain.

A few moments later there was change in the atmosphere, the wind veered around to the west, passed on and came from the northwest. Then there appeared in the northeast a de-tached section of shattered rainbow. The air became crisp and the moisture departed-then out came the sun in all its glory and beauty and effulgence and the 20,000 persons on the fair grounds knew that at least several urs more of fair weather was sure

Indeed providence has been good to us this week. At the threshold of Fall, when rain in this district rarely keeps away for a whole week at a time, we have enjoyed five days that have been perfect with the exception of a few minutes. When we consider this and then take into account the perfection of the management the State Fair Board has given us it is no wonder that Oregon's 52d State Fair has set a record never before equaled—may not be even approached for years and years to come. I have not hitherto said overmuch about the management, about the board of governors. It would, however, be less than justice to say that the overworked members of the board have performed their duties with a degree of ability and conscientiousness not often mittered in bodies of that character. Witnessed in bodies of that character, While not detracting one lots from any one of them, it seems that to the president, Henry Booth, and to the sec-retary, Frank Meredith, the entire state owes a debt of thanks, for thanks is about all they get out of it—except the hardest of hard work. It is true Mr. Meredith draws a salary, but it must be remembered he devotes about all of his time to the duties of his office and likely to have increased the number. his salary is in no ways commensurate The Spokane's cargo was light. The

Sitting in the grandstand this aftersitting in the grandstand this after-noon, looking away to the east, out towards and over the Waldo hills, I was approached by that splendid citi-zen of Salem, P. H. D'Arcy. He began to talk of olden times; how as a little boy his parents brought him from his native place, Brooklyn, N. Y. This was

Fair Visited Each Year.

When he was 7 years old, in 1861, his parents took him to the first Oregon State Fair at Oregon City. He at-tended the next one, which was held on the present grounds, and he has been present every year since. He painted for me a word picture of the of the early races, of the exhibits and the exhibitors, of the modes of convey-ances used by the people in getting to the great fairs, which at first lasted for 10 days, beginning on Thursday and running over through all of the suc-

Before us there were perhaps 200 automobiles on the grounds, and around the grounds there were hundreds and the grounds there were hundreds and hundreds of others, the value of them got into trouble in the same vicinity, being estimated by one of the officials she having struck Ripple Rock, in Seybeing estimated by one of the officials at more than $1,500,000. Mr. D'Arcy compared the old conveyances with these, the old ox-caris, carryalls and wagons with wheels which were but a section of a log, and their value with that of all the chattels in Oregon in

If I could but paint it—weakly, poor-ly, in language of poverty and purility—the reading of it, the conception of it, would tell a better story of our early Oregon gala days than has been written in a decade. Such stories, such truthful tales of early Oregon appeal so to me, so move me that it is difficult for me to make m breif. But the hearing and the telling of them-hearing them in a wealth of diction and telling them in a poverty of description—seem to bring in my innermost soul a greater love for my Oregon. Comparison Is Suggested.

I hope others may read these lines and then close their eyes and think about what Oregon is and what Oregon was when the first State Fair was held 51 years ago.

e greatest of Oregon's State "What rare privilege it has been for me to be here and to write about it! Hundreds of persons have come to me to thank me for the way The Oregonian has treated the fair in the news columns. The best space in the paper has been given each day to the Many have told me that they were moved to come because of these articles, and the complete accounts of the events given by The Oregonian's regular correspondent stationed here practically bade them come and witness the greatest fair ever given in the state.

It is a labor of love to assist in such a cause, to assist the managers and at the same time confer a favor on the public by truthfully telling about this great event. But one more day re-mains. I can make but one more appeal. Tomorrow night at 10 o'clock the exhibits in the pavilion will be in dark-ness; at 5 o'clock tomorrow the cattle and other livestock will be withdrawn from view-but until those hours the fair, as a fair, as an entity, will be in-If you have not been here, sure and come. If you do you can ever that you attended Oregon's greatest fair-unless it is beaten in the fuwhich seems almost impossible If it ever is, it will be because of a greater wealth, a greater population to draw from, and not because of better management or a greater variety of resources.
