BY LEONE CASS BAER.

It was a grave mistake to think that there was no public for Shakespeare in Portland. Margaret Anglin found it possible to fill the Heilig Theater last night with lovers of Shakespearean literature and drama. Her latest production of the comedy of "Twelfth Night" was the realization of an ideal she has held for years—that of presenting Shakespeare for all who have eyes to see and ears to hear and presenting him with little cutting of the lines.

Miss Anglin's worth as a Shakespearean actress has long been recognized by even the most politely indifferent or the cynically superior. Her production, which she has managed in every detail from training her players to designing costumes and special scenery, does not fall short either of expectancy or of the high level of achievement for which this excellent actress is known.

"Twelfth Night" never has been seen here in such a glorious setting. From the singularly beautiful seacoast of Illyria in the first scene, with its dash of color in the soft, slow-moving clouds to the box-like effects of Olivia's garden the best of taste has been combined with apparently unequalled resources of this well equipped stage.

Actress Embodies Original Ideas.

The production is an elaborate and elegant experiment with new scenic theory, Miss Anglin's own. She has entirely repudiated the ancient Elizabethan; she will have none of the severity of the Great versions, and she has gone one step further than mere cunning and detail of the modern Belascoesque.

Miss Anglin presents "Twelfth Night" according to her conception of Shakespeare today, if acted at all, should be presented with all the resources of modern times; that he should be treated not as an author speaking a dead language, but as a living force speaking with the voice of living humanity. She applies to this production the same care, same reverence for accuracy, same high regard for stage illusion, for scenery and for costume as is devoted to modern writings by authors of less degree. But the scenic embellishments are constantly subordinate and harmonious with the dramatic interest and not once does this managerial-actress offend the imagination by inappropriate accessories to the play itself or of the ancient and dearly honorable.

Viola as a role is open to few, if any, departures in interpretation. Margaret Anglin is a paragon of Violas. In her she understands the dash, the spirit and the buoyancy that Sebastian's sister should possess. Her buoyant and radiant charm transports one into the rarefied atmosphere of the comedy.

She gives the role of Viola a wider appeal and Shakespeare a larger franchise. In her little boyish cap and jacket she was youth incarnate and brought memories of Peter Pan. She has a wealth of little gestures and cadences of voice that fit beautifully into such a role.

Star System Not Recognized.

One of the marvelous features of the production is that Miss Anglin subordinates herself and recognizes no star system. With her "play's the thing." Only a big actress would do it. The starlight falls alike on all. Her supporting cast is happily suited to the roles.

For Sir Toby Belch there is Sidney Greenstreet, a splendid Shakespearean farceur. A bibulous, garrulous, roly-poly, lovable old Toby is Greenstreet and one of the great delights of the evening is his characterization.

Fuller Mellish, noted for his Shakespearean achievements in Malvolio, Antonio, which ends in his wooing of Olivia, was offered with a delicious spirit seldom witnessed.

Ruth Holt-Boudcaut is a lovely Olivia, pleasing of voice. The clown was a carefully carried out conception by Max Monteleo. Wallace Widcombe was the fat, fat, fat Aguecheek. Jan MacClaren was dignified Duke Orsino, a role that may be the leading one but by no means a showy one. Max Fisher was a capable Sebastian.

Tonight and tomorrow afternoon "As You Like It" will be presented. Tomorrow night "The Taming of the Shrew" is the bill.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Prince Albert of Monaco told the National Press Club tonight that this country was magnificent, "but it is young and has all the exuberance of youth." He added that the most impressed him was the universal desire for learning on the part of all classes.

TELEPHONE CASE STARTS

Inquiry Into Alleged Trust Opens at Tacoma.

TACOMA, Wash., Oct. 20.—Testimony that service by the Sunset Telephone Company in Tacoma was poor before the advent of the Home Telephone Company; that it improved at once when competition began and has continued to be good, but not as good as before the absorption, was offered today before C. J. Smythe, Special Assistant Attorney-General, at the first hearing in the Northwest of the Government's case against the alleged telephone trust.

Reverend W. Colner, former United States District Attorney, and A. M. Richards, former City Councilman, were witnesses today.

Indication of the line of defense to be pursued by the telephone company was given in the cross-examination of Richards by E. S. Pillsbury, of San Francisco, general counsel for the defendants. He asked the witness if it was not true that Tacoma was a rapidly-growing city, spread over a large area, and that it would be difficult to keep the service up to the increasing population. An effort also was made to point out that the competing company had not been a success financially. Pillsbury also asked if a new company having comparatively few subscribers might not be able to make good on the promise of service and concern with more business to handle.

UTILITY PROTEST FILED

COMPLAINT MADE AGAINST TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Failure to Extend Service to All Parts of Portland and to Bury Wires Are Among Charges.

SALEM, Or., Oct. 20.—(Special.)—Alleging that the company is charging more than the established rates, and that it is violating various other provisions of the ordinance giving it a franchise, H. L. Christensen, B. O. Kean and J. J. Solhaug, of Portland, through Attorneys Davis and Farrell, today filed a complaint with the State Railroad Commission against the Home Telephone & Telegraph Company. It is alleged that the company is subject to the provisions of chapter 278 of the Oregon laws of 1911, and ordinance 14,899 of Portland, which grants Charles E. Sumner the privilege of conducting a telephone system in Portland under certain restrictions. The Commission is asked to compel the company to abide by the provisions of the ordinance.

It is alleged that the defendant is violating section 1 of the ordinance by not extending its automatic system to all parts of the city; that it is violating section 2, which provides that all wires, conduits, pipes, etc., must be placed under ground, and that it is violating section 11 in not providing separate metallic circuits throughout the city. It is also alleged that it has several miles of iron wire. Mr. Christensen conducts a drugstore at Third and Burnside streets.

DRUGGIST'S ACT RETALIATORY

Attorney Reported to Have Found Discrepancies When Suit Pends.

"My object in filing this suit," said Mr. Christensen last night, "is to restrict the Home Company in its dealings with others and partly to get a comeback on them for the way they treated me."

According to his story, Christensen had two automatic telephones, one in his drug store at Third and Burnside streets, and the other in his home at Ninth and Dolph streets. The company promised him a complete automatic service, he says, but to talk from his home to his store he was obliged to call an operator.

During the snow last winter, he says, the company gave him poor service, and this was the more troublesome on account of sickness, which necessitated much telephoning between the two places. Many times, he asserts, he was obliged to walk to a neighbor's house in order to telephone.

He complained to the company, and finally asked to have his telephone taken from the house, for which the company charged him $5. This Christensen refused to pay, although he had signed a contract to do so if he did not use the telephone a full year. His reason for refusing was that the company refused to pay, although he had signed a contract to do so if he did not use the telephone a full year. His reason for refusing was that the company refused to pay, although he had signed a contract to do so if he did not use the telephone a full year.

Efforts to Find Boys Futile.

All efforts to locate Robert King, aged 15, and Harry Atwood, aged 14, who left their home at Wichita station last Wednesday, had been unsuccessful last night and city and county officials were asked to join in the search for the boys.

CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD WILL CEASE

Portland, Eugene & Eastern to Attempt Little Building During Winter.

SALEM, Or., Oct. 20.—(Special.)—Frank J. McGettigan's new sketch, "The Lady White Slave," had its premiere presentation at Ye Liberty Theater here today and scored a profound success.

Earl Dwire, formerly a member of the Baker Stock Company in Portland, represented the District Attorney, the principal character, Ruth Lechler, was the District Attorney's pretty stenographer and Clifford Lancaster, as a rival for the office at the coming election.

Believing his opponent stood a chance of winning, and with all that cunning a shrewd lawyer acquires after being District Attorney for a time, the elder man boldly accused his rival of having violated the white slave act. The stenographer apparently played into the hands of the scheming District Attorney and so far as the audience was concerned it seemed that the young man was doomed. Then came the denouement. The District Attorney announced that the stenographer was the girl that had been stolen by his rival, the hero seized her in his arms, and pushing back the other man, exclaimed: "You boob, we were married a month ago."

The theater was well filled at the matinee performance and at night it was packed to the doors. If the reception of the little drama here is any criterion it will be warmly received throughout the circuit.

ELECTRIC WORK CONTINUES

Fourth-Street' and "Jefferson-Street" Lines Probably Will Be Operated With Trolley Soon After First of Year.

Construction work on the Portland, Eugene & Eastern Railway, with the exception of the transformation of existing steam lines into electric roads, will cease for the winter after November 1, and will be resumed, presumably, early in the Spring.

It is probable that these lines will be turned over to the Southern Pacific for operation until until they are electrified. The Southern Pacific is the parent corporation of the Portland, Eugene & Eastern.

Meanwhile electrification of the "first unit" of the Willamette Valley Line, as the Portland, Eugene & Eastern is popularly known, will continue. This unit, consists of the "Fourth street" and the "Jefferson street" lines between Portland and McMinnville.

It is probable that these lines will be electrified and ready for electric operation soon after the first of the year. They aggregate about 100 miles in length.

Roads Will Be Shifted.

It is planned to turn these steam roads, which now are operated by the Southern Pacific, over to the Portland, Eugene & Eastern for operation as soon as they are electrified.

According to present plans electrification of the second unit, which includes the lines between McMinnville, Independence, Corvallis, Monroe and Eugene, will be started some time next year. The Southern Pacific recently made an appropriation of more than $10,000,000 for electrification of its lines in California and Oregon. It was intended to expend about half this sum on the Portland, Eugene and Eastern. Approximately $2,000,000 was spent in the present year. It is understood that the balance of the allotment is available for future use. One of the most important details in connection with the operation of electric lines is the operation of electric lines. It is expected that this work, too, can be taken up within a short time.

Many Men Laid Off.

On account of the increased expense attending construction in the winter months no new work will be done between November 1 and the advent of more favorable weather in the Spring. Consequently many men employed in construction crews in and about Eugene have been laid off for the winter.

The Portland, Eugene & Eastern is organized primarily for construction purposes and for the operation of electric lines. It is expected as a natural consequence that the Southern Pacific will be called on to operate the steam roads that it has acquired or built.

This arrangement would eliminate the expense of maintaining a separate organization for both operation and traffic on each of the two roads.

If the Southern Pacific takes over the operation of the Portland, Eugene & Eastern's steam lines it is probable

TACOMA TUNNEL CAVES IN

Street and Gas Main Damaged and Homes Declared in Danger.

TACOMA, Wash., Oct. 20.—(Special.)—Without warning 1000 cubic yards of earth caved in the old Union Pacific tunnel today leaving a hole 40 feet square in the middle of South Yakima avenue at the corner of Jefferson avenue. This is the third cave-in during the last few months. A big gas main was broken today and several hours' work was required to mend the break and stop the flow of gas.

City Engineer Raleigh declares the entire tunnel is a menace to the houses and streets over it and says the city should force the Union Pacific interests either to fill the big bore or line it with concrete. The tunnel was projected and partly finished by the Harriman lines for a Tacoma entrance before a traffic agreement was made with the Northern Pacific.
