with the argument or counsel, the charge of Judge Alken occupying only half an hour at the end.

William A. Morse, counsel for Mrs. Eaton, spoke for four hours, drawing a picture of the defendant as a loving. self-sacrificing wife, entirely justified in her beliefs about her husband. She was a "martyr" and her only fault was that she "loved too much," her attorney declared, while he portrayed the Ad-miral as a man of double personality. one in whom corruption was concealed under the mask of gentlemanly bear-ing. He asserted that the prosecution had not proved a single count in its murder charge against Mrs. Eaton.
