Commenting on the attitude of English brewers toward the hop market, a writer

so vital to the brewing industry, the brew-s are being led into a trap, and are doing ervibing that iles in their power not only to prevent an increase of the acreage, but to actually bring about a large decrease, and it beems that their efforts are likely to meet with an astonishing success, for a movement is already well advanced, baving for its object the organized grubbing of a large portion of the present hop acreage. This has been brought about solely—in the first instance—by the great antagonism whown by hop traders and brewers to the interests of the growers this year and by the advice to buy American hops and let the English growers wait, which has been so readily acted upon by many brewers.

"It is well known that the exceptionally early purchase of American hops on English account had the effect of raising American prices to a large extent. Probably this has proved.
