VALJEAN AND FANTINE. From Victor Hugo's Les Misérables, Coming Sunday, Jan. 4, to Peoples. The biggest film production yet produced is "Les Misérables," by Victor Hugo, in 11,000 feet. The film production is in two distinct and complete parts, each separate from the other. The first deals with the lives of Jean Valjean and Fantine; the second half depicts the fortunes of Cosette and Marius. Neither part is necessary to the other. One may see the first part and understand it without reference to the second, and vice versa. It has been seen part one to be able to thoroughly understand and appreciate part two. At the Peoples Theater the show runs one hour and a half, except in rare instances. It is impossible to adhere to the established schedule in putting on the entire 11,000 feet of "Les Misérables" at one performance. The management feels that the public does not desire to sit three full hours looking at a series of pictures.
