

"ROAST" ARE PARE IN BIG LEAGUES

Managers and Mates Have but Sympathy for Unlucky One Who Makes Bad Error.

JEALOUSY RELIC OF PAST

Matty Tells How It Feels to Lose and Win Big Games Which May Mean Pennant or Championship. Prestige and Money.

BY CHRISTY MATHEWSON. MARLIN, Tex., March 8.—(Special.)—Most followers of baseball, I have found, are eager to know how the players feel after a big moment in the league race, or after the losing or winning of an important game on which may hang the pennant or the world's championship. As the Giants have failed in their effort to retrieve last year's loss, and also were the contenders in one league race which was the most exciting and most closely contested in the history of the game, I am in a position to supply some brief accounts of the attitude of the players at big moments, both in victory and defeat.

Big leaguers, at times of defeat, seldom bawl out a fellow for mistakes. Rather, they try to protect him, and the supposed jealousy that exists in the profession is mostly in the imagination of fans and writers. McGraw is popularly believed to tear into the team when it loses. He seldom does this, however. He seldom does this, however. He seldom does this, however. He seldom does this, however.

"The longest walk in the world," said "Larry" Doyle one day after he had struck out in a game, "is from the plate back to the bench after fanning." Probably one of the greatest crises ever to break in baseball was when Merkle failed to touch second base.

Another big crisis was when the Giants lost the deciding game to the Cubs in 1905 after Merkle's mistake had made the extra contest for the pennant. Merkle never brought home a run, but he was not the only player to be faulted with "Fred." He felt badly enough himself. The tough luck, Fred said to Merkle was, "You just fanned."

Snodgrass and Merkle made a couple of miscues in the final game of the 1912 season. Merkle's error was a fault-finding in the big league. I have fault-finding in the big league. I have fault-finding in the big league. I have fault-finding in the big league.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, Corvallis, March 8.—(Special.)—Local fans, in the midst of their rejoicing at the victory of the Aggie team over the Ducks, are turning their attention to the baseball situation and looking over the local diamond under the direction of Wilke Clark, the recently arrived baseball coach.

Quaker Fencers Defeat Yale. PHILADELPHIA, March 8.—(Special.)—The Quaker team defeated Yale tonight, six bouts to three. Van Kirk, of Pennsylvania, was the star of the meet, winning all of his bouts. Van Kirk, of Pennsylvania, was the star of the meet, winning all of his bouts. Van Kirk, of Pennsylvania, was the star of the meet, winning all of his bouts.
