Divorced Life

By Helen Hessing Fuessle.

Copyright—The Adams Newspaper Service. On the Brink of Discovery. TUESDAYS and Fridays of each week Marian went to the Van Dines to teach Greek pupils. The advance payment of $20 seemed like a miniature fortune to her. It was the first money she had ever earned. It repelled the gnawing wolf from the door. It charged her being with a sense of self-reliance that was good to feel.

In a letter to Ann Stewart, the article on the train, on my way back from my visit with you has meant a great deal to me. As a result, I'm a teacher of Greek and Latin. The school is good fair on the train. Mrs. Van Dine of this city. Her daughter took me for an actress. Can you beat that?

"I admitted having given readings—more or less of an exaggeration, to be sure—but the upshot was that Mrs. V. D. asked if I would consider making her daughter as my pupil. The girl is 16, and like most 16-year-olds, was to be an actress. "So they sat patiently by, at two dollars a sitting, while the young lady butchered Shakespeare. "The Unfortunate I don't thank me for it. But I console myself with the thought that I'm playing the game, bluffing the thing.

I expect to have a regular class and to teach dramatics to veritable job lots of stage-struck young ladies. Maybe I shall have a real studio of my own some day—with a list of eager candidates for instruction. "Wouldn't it be grand?"

In another letter, to her brother in Seattle, Marian gave a glowing account of her professional headway, and held forth the promise that she would undoubtedly be able to obtain a loan he had made her. Her projected class would soon be formed, she thought, an event which would soon lead to the cessation of her economic Easy Street.

Marian had wondered at, but had never questioned the motives back of Mrs. Van Dine's offer. She was a woman who taught her daughter to satisfy herself with the conclusion that she was doing a noble thing. She had had felt instinctively that her services to her daughter would be of value. Nor did Marian ever question the wisdom of her instruction worth two dollars a sitting. Mrs. Van Dine had offered to pay it. That was enough. Like most young women everywhere, she was a creature of the sense of value. All her life she had been a learner, getting something for nothing, content to take it, angered if it was not forthcoming. Her income had been the chief and foremost disturbance in her married life. Had Frank had a fortune, she could have been as happy with him as she was now. This she had known subconsciously, although she had never admitted it.

Many a strong man works all day in a steel mill, in a factory or the railroad tracks for a two dollar wage, producing values at least equal to the hardest physical labor. Marian Winthrop was receiving two dollars for an hour desultory instruction of a 16-year-old girl, doing nothing but what was based on no particular training, fitness, or effort. Yet such was her quick knowledge of the real world that she took her compensation without question or hesitation, winning in a slipshod hour what myriads of toilers would earn in a week of 40 or 50 hours as long to acquire.

Had Marian known a little more of the world, the circumstances might have been different. She was a wonder in her day. As it was, she was entirely unprepared for the astounding turn events were destined soon to take. "Remember, whom God Hath Joined Together."

How I Darkened My Gray Hair. Lady Gives Simple Home Recipe That She Used to Darken Her Gray Hair. "TIZ" makes sore, burning, tired feet fairly dance with delight. A good foot aches and pains, the corns, callouses, blisters, bunions and chilblains.

For years I tried to restore my gray hair to its natural color with the prepared dyes and stains, but none of them gave satisfaction and they were so expensive I finally ran onto a simple recipe which I mixed at home that gave wonderful results. I gave the recipe, which is as follows, to a number of my friends, and they are all delighted with it. To 7 oz. of water add a small box of Barbo Compound, 1 oz. of bay rum and 1/2 oz. of glycerine. Use every other day until the hair becomes the required shade, then every two weeks. It will not only darken the gray hair, but remove dandruff and scalp humors, and acts as a tonic to the hair. It is not sticky or greasy, does not rub off and does not color the scalp. You can prepare it at home at very little expense.—Adv.

This Skin Peeler All the Rage in Very Much. There is a growing tendency among women of culture and fashion to pay more attention to hygienic means of preserving their charms. The advent of macerated wax has been largely responsible for this. This restorative substance produces complexion so natural in appearance, so magnificently soft, that artificial complexion is no longer desired. Instead of "doctoring" an offensive skin, the skin is peeled off. This wax peels the skin gradually, in such fine particles, so discomfiting is experienced. The freckles, pores, skin blemish, wholly in evidence within a week or two, is like white, satiny soft and smooth. It's not a patched-over complexion, but a brand new one. That's why macerated wax has become such a rage among society folk. The wax is put on nights like cold cream and washed off morning. All druggists have it; one ounce will do. Another hygienic treatment now much in favor is one to remove wrinkles, caused by deepening lines, powdered saxoline in one-tenth inch which is used as a wash lotion. It "acts like magic."—Adv.

A Single Application Banishes Hair From Face. (Beauty Topics) Here is a way to remove annoying hairy growths while you are preparing your toilette for the evening: Mix into a stiff paste one ounce powdered delatone and water to cover the hairs not wanted. Apply, and in about 3 minutes rub off and every trace of hair comes with it. Washing the skin to remove the surplus delatone leaves it soft, clear and free from blemish. To insure success, be certain that you get real delatone.—Adv.

Economical Housekeeping By Jane Edgington. THERE is always a demand for chop suey receipts. One would like to make a paradoxical remark that chop suey is not a recipe; it is a mixture. The inexpensive chop suey represents a French trick of the trade which has been played upon us more rigidly than any other.

Here is the trick: The Chinese have a habit of cooking their meats and vegetables in a mixture of Indian soy and Chinese or soy sauce are as nearly the same sort of thing as such things ever are when made by different manufacturers. Some of the sauces sold today as soy sauce are extremely like good Worcestershire sauce.

Besides the trick chop suey represents a good joke on the American who likes it, but is at the same time violently opposed, as he or she imagines, to the use of alcohol. This is a kind of a matter of fact, peanut oil is largely used by the Chinese in making the inexpensive chop suey of home-made materials, instead of the usual bamboo shoots, water nut, Chinese mushrooms, etc., for which we pay twice as much. We are not to make a mystery. The better the cook the greater the mystery becomes, whether it is the inexpensive or expensive sort he makes.

It is the cooking over almost no fire and the simmering in hot water that is hard for us American cooks to understand. Some of us do not think we have been stewing anything unless we can put in a lot of water, boil it away, add some more, and perhaps cook that away. The chop suey you commence the frying process with the oil boiling, but it must not be kept boiling or the ingredients get fried to a crisp. Reduce the fire immediately so that the ingredients are simmering instead of frying at the last. There is no need of adding water or a broth to finish the process, but chicken broth may be added to several pounds of meat) is sometimes added after the oil in which the ingredients are fried is poured off, and the whole simmered in it. A great number of people have failed with the best of chop suey receipts because they cannot believe that things can be cooked except more or less fat and furiously at a boiling temperature.

Wives and Inspiration. "Do you think a wife is an inspiration to a man?" queried the Frivolous Young Thing. "She is either an inspiration or a bomb," replied the Elderly Woman. "And it is certainly pleasant to be led than prodded." "Yes," admitted the Frivolous Young Thing, "I suppose it is." "When a wife is an inspiration," a man simply succeeds on wings, to the heights of success; but when she is a bomb, it is a laborious climb, and sometimes he is balked and refuses to go altogether. After all, it is better to have an inspiration than a bomb. The man who works because of the road of wife and family nagging isn't going to do as good work as the man who wants to realize his wife's faith in him. You know what Andrea del Sarto said. "No, I don't," replied the Frivolous Young Thing. "You didn't put soul into me." And then he goes on to say that because his wife was not an inspiration she might have been, he was the great artist he might have been.

"But don't you think," slowly reflected the Frivolous Young Thing, "that the ring upon her finger, 'that a man who would excuse himself in that way from doing his best is not exactly what you would want in a wife, would you express it without help from anybody?" "The exceptional man might," admitted the Elderly Woman. "But after all, we are very human. And the love and ambition and faith of one of us is worth a great deal more to us. When the wife is a man cares for sets a goal for him and tells him she knows he'll make it, he's going to do it or break it. That's the way, with most men he's more likely to achieve it than if she is indifferent or doubtful of him. And surely it is a finer and more joyful way to make a man do his best than merely to be a burden and compel him to develop muscle because he has a load to carry.

"But perhaps," objected the Frivolous Young Thing, "a woman might want to be something or her own account, instead of merely an inspiration to some man." "She lifts herself up by inspiring him," replied the Elderly Woman. "And what happier life could a woman want than to work with another to bring out the best and highest in each? And even if she did want to do some special work of her own, the higher she rose the more of an incentive she would be to him. And often a woman who can be a true inspiration to a man, who can be the means of developing the very best that is in him, is doing an unworthy work. And many a woman who concludes the Elderly Woman, shrewdly, in this way: "I can't do right service to the world, who otherwise might accomplish little."

"If I may," said the Frivolous Young Thing, "I'll be a great lawyer some day." "And you are just the sort of lovable, bewitching little home-body to give him the relaxation and the rest, the strenuous day in the courts," smiled the Elderly Woman. "In the vernacular of the day, my dear, go to it!"

Do Not Be Hasty. Dear Miss Blake: I have read that you have given me other girls' advice. Maybe you could give me some advice. I am engaged, and in love, with a good-looking boy of 22. I was engaged to another boy of 18, now I'm going to be 18 in December. He seems to be quite a friend with another girl. It seems as if he does not love me very much. We have been together for a long time, and I break the engagement, or shall I try to win him back? "ANXIOUS."

Do not be hasty. The career of a very young to be considered matrimony. If the young man loves another girl better than he does you, it is lucky you found it. Treat the young man considerably, but if he persists in his course you should tell him frankly how you feel about his conduct. You are the one to decide whether or not to break your engagement and your own heart and head will tell you what to do. By the way, what are the young man's prospects? Can he support a wife? Is he serious in his intentions? Seaside Names Publicity Man. SEASIDE Or., April 14.—(Special.)—
